"CLOUD 9"

One Year Old "Cloud 9" — Spring 1964

Discovered and developed on our own nursery. The ultimate perfection of loveliness in America's favorite small tree! Protected by plant patent #2112, issued Dec. 26, 1961. Extremely prolific and precocious—it is not unusual for a one-year tree to have 15 to 20 bloom buds. There are many reports from all over the country of trees having as many as 75 to 90 blooms the first year after transplanting! Has been checked out and enthusiastically accepted by leading nurserymen from Georgia to Massachusetts, and from Missouri to Michigan. The bracts (petals) are oval and overlapping, giving the blossoms a pleasing disk-like effect. The habit of growth is spreading. The tree tries to assume the delightful horizontal branching of native Dogwoods found growing in deep shady woods. Don't wait forever for White Dogwood to bloom. Use "CLOUD 9," and have blooms from the very first year. Budded on Transplanted Seedlings.

A few quotes from some very satisfied users of "Cloud 9":

Kentucky, April 9, 1961: "The little Dogwood (Cloud 9) measures 30 in. from the top of the ball to the uppermost twig. When it was installed in the Home Show, it had 64 buds."

Missouri, May 4, 1961: "You should see my Cloud 9. It isn't very tall, but it has 93 blossoms. It looks like a bouquet of white flowers."

NOTE: The Cloud 9 Dogwood on our front cover was growing in our front yard until needed for the White House Garden, where it was shipped by Delta Airlines back in April, in conjunction with the Atlanta Dogwood Trail Commission.

CONIFEROUS EVERGREENS

We have discontinued our old practice of field growing Juniper liners from hardwood cuttings. All materials now are produced in polyquon enclosures, and taken through pots. This has greatly relieved the strain of timing in the Spring. We have used a high peat potting mix, liberal fertilizer, and are producing beautiful first class liners.
