Gentlemen:

Two years ago next November I ordered One Dozen Young Dewberry plants from you. You sent 14. I set them as per your instructions. All lived. This, the second year, I picked 19 big gallons and one quart.

A Bulletin describing the merits of this fine berry was sent me by the Georgia Experiment Station. But, when I harvested my berries I was surprised to find that they were larger finer and more productive than the bulletin claimed for them.

For example: The bulletin claimed a length of one and one-quarter inches in length for the best berries, but I measured several that were one and one-half inches long. Then, I gathered more quarts from each plant than the bulletin claimed.

As for the flavor of the raw berry, the pies, un-jelly, the syrup, the jam and the juice, I consider that it surpasses all other berries. Eighteen different families to whom I gave free samples, enough for several pies, bear the same enthusiastic testimony. I thank you for helping me to get a start with this fine fruit and I heartily recommend it to anyone interested.

With very best wishes for your success, I am ever yours,
