MY BUSINESS METHODS

READ THEM

I guarantee all tubers to be true to name and their arrival in good condition.

Cash must be sent with every order.

Goods wanted by mail, add 2 cts. on the price of each bulb for postage, unless otherwise directed. All tubers sent by express at purchaser's expense.

Before ordering, read this

It sometimes happens that the supply of a variety becomes exhausted, and I am compelled either to substitute or ship the order partially filled. I wish definite information on this point. If you wish me to substitute; if absolutely necessary, say so, and add a few extra numbers, which I could use in place of those sold out. If you do not wish me to substitute, say so, and I will fill all orders as far as possible and return any money remaining.

The principal requirements of the Dahlia are a sunny location, liberally manured, plenty of room and the surface of the ground kept light. Many seedsmen have tried to spread the idea that the Dahlia will grow anywhere; that all that is needed is to plant the tubers and they will care for themselves and the grower be assured of first-class flowers. Such an idea is directly opposed to facts. While they are easily cared for, first-class results are obtained only by first-class treatment. I am sure that those who love flowers and care for them in earnest, will find that there is no plant which is more responsive to kind treatment.

For the dwarf and semi-dwarf varieties we would recommend the "single stem branching system," which is as follows:

One shoot only is allowed to grow. When it has two pairs of leaves and an undeveloped growth on the top, it is pinched back as far as the upper leaves. Four branches will then start, one on each leaf. When the plant is grown it will have a short, strong, single stem, which comes only an inch or two above ground, and four long branches which are strong enough to hold themselves up without stakes, giving the plant a neat bushy appearance.

Show and Fancy Varieties

In form and habit these two classes are identical, the only distinctive feature being the manner of the marking. The Show Dahlias include the large, round flowers with solid colors, and those having a light ground color with a darker tip. The Fancy Dahlias are large, round, striped varieties, and those having a dark ground color with a distinctive lighter tip.

In growing and cutting flowers for an exhibition, the above rules should be strictly followed.
