Solution of How to Make Land Pay "Better."

his illustrated folder tends to show the Sober Paragon Chestnut grafted trees, introduced by C. K. Sober, which is the most widely planted and uniformly successful variety cultivated in the United States. Its rapidity of its growth is not surpassed by any tree within our knowledge. The Sober Paragon Chestnut Tree is a constant bearer and never has any off years.

Amphatically, the culture of Sober Paragon Chestnuts pays; the market demand seems practically unlimited, and has been, so far, many times greater than the supply. One of the early crops—2,000 bushels—was taken by one commission merchant at a high price.

Six dollars per bushel is a fair average price for nuts, and the experience of other growers thoroughly accords with this. As the trees require so very little care or special attention, the cost of gathering and marketing the nuts is practically the entire expense. The Sober Paragon Chestnut will thrive practically everywhere—East, West, North and South; it will withstand extremes of heat, cold and drought with less injury than most other trees.

A single graft grew in one year, 54 ft. 10 in. of wood; this included the main stem and all the lateral branches, and the next season it bore three quarts of nuts. This tree was seventeen months old when the nuts were taken from it. This graft was set May 1, 1903, and nuts ripened October 1, 1907.

The nuts are very large, often measures $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches or more across while average nuts rarely measure less than $1\frac{1}{4}$ inches. The burs contain three or more broad, thick handsome nuts. All of us are more or less familiar with the very large chestnuts that are often sold, but we are too familiar with their astringent puckery flavor. Sober Paragon Chestnuts are fully as mild and sweet as the native chestnuts.

Prof. Brackett, United States Pomologist, Washington, D. C., speaks of Sober Paragon as follows: "The Sober Paragon comes the nearest in quality to the native chestnut of any of the cultivated varieties that I have examined. It is of large size, fine appearance and excellent flavor."
