LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
DIVISION OF BIOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Washington, D. C., August 9, 1901.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith, and to recommend for publication, as Bulletin No. 16 of the Biological Survey, a report entitled 'Digest of Game Laws for 1901,' by T. S. Palmer and H. W. Olds. The object of this report is to present in convenient form the provisions of the laws now in force, including the amendments enacted during the present year. In view of the fact that the game season opens in several States on September 1, it is desirable that this bulletin be published and distributed as promptly as possible.

Respectfully,

T. S. PALMER,
Acting Chief, Biological Survey.

Hon. JAMES WILSON,
Secretary of Agriculture.

PREFACE.

The act of Congress approved May 25, 1900, requires the Secretary of Agriculture to collect and publish, from time to time, useful information concerning the preservation of game and other birds. In accordance with this provision it has been deemed important to publish a digest of the game laws embodying the numerous changes made during the present year.

In the spring of 1901 legislative sessions were held in about forty States and Territories, and in nearly all amendments to the game laws were enacted. Numerous changes were made in the old laws, amounting to 200 or more in the matter of close seasons alone. This multitude of amendments has necessitated a thorough revision of the bulletin issued in 1900, entitled 'Laws Regulating the Transportation and Sale of Game,' and the issue of a new report has afforded an opportunity for making certain important additions, including a chapter on Federal game laws, a digest of the county laws of Virginia, and incorporation of the provisions of the Canadian laws. Experience has shown that while much stress is laid on close seasons, comparatively little importance is attached to violations of other provisions of game laws. It does not seem to be generally recognized that killing game by illegal methods, in excess of the number allowed by law, or for unlawful purposes, is as serious an offense as killing game out of season. In order to emphasize this point, a special chapter on methods has been introduced and some of the other sections in the former report have been rearranged. As the bulletin now stands it is practically a complete digest of existing Federal, State, and Provincial laws relating to the capture, shipment, and sale of game. It has been possible, however, to give this information only in the most condensed form. Attention is called to the tables at the end of the bulletin in which the close seasons under State and Provincial laws for all the more important game of the United States and Canada are brought together for ready reference, and similarly close seasons for the principal game protected in Maryland, Virginia, and North Carolina, under county laws. It has been possible to give extracts from the laws only in the cases of sections relating to shipment and sale. All provisions relating to enforcement of laws, appointment and duties of game commissions and wardens, procedure, search, and disposition of confiscated game have been necessarily omitted. Detailed information on these and other points must be sought in unofficial compilations of game laws, in the compilations issued by State authorities, or in the statutes themselves.

In the preparation of the bulletin much assistance has been derived from the valuable compendium published under the title of 'Game Laws in Brief,' which, however, is designed primarily for the use of sportsmen, and omits penalties and frequently the provisions regarding sale. The difficulties of the work have also been materially lessened by the aid rendered by State officers and private individuals, who, with uniform courtesy, have furnished copies of the laws or other information.

It should be stated that many of the statutes were not accessible until after July 1, and even at the date of going to press it has been impracticable to consult the county laws passed this year in Tennessee, or the amendments enacted in Delaware. The time for preparation of the bulletin has thus been short, and while great care has been taken in compilation, errors may have crept in, which, under other circumstances, might easily have been eliminated. Sportsmen and others, therefore, are requested to report promptly any inaccuracies or omissions that may be detected.

DIGEST OF GAME LAWS FOR 1901.¹

I. GENERAL DISCUSSION OF GAME LAWS.

INTRODUCTION.

The game laws now in force in the United States are of two kinds, Federal and State. Federal laws regulate interstate commerce in, and importation of game; the preservation of game in Alaska, the Indian Territory, and the District of Columbia, and on Government reservations. State laws regulate the capture, shipment, and sale of game within State jurisdictions. Canadian laws, like those of the United States, may also be divided into General laws, comprising chiefly regulations concerning the export of game; and Provincial laws, corresponding to State laws, which govern the capture, shipment, and sale of game. In some States certain counties have special statutes or are partially or entirely exempt from the operation of the general game laws. In the four States of Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, and Tennessee, where local statutes are especially popular, there are probably more game laws for the three hundred or more counties than in all the rest of the United States. It should be noted, however, that these local laws are enacted by the States and not by the counties themselves. State legislatures are jealous of their rights in such matters, and, except in Mississippi, seldom delegate even the fixing of game seasons to county boards of supervisors. In many instances these laws do not conform to those of adjoining States or counties, and even in so fundamental a matter as the definition of game there is a noticeable lack of agreement.

DEFINITIONS OF GAME.

In Bouvier's Law Dictionary game is defined as "Birds and beasts of a wild nature obtained by fowling and hunting;" in the Code of Mississippi as "all kinds of animals and birds found in the state of nature commonly so-called." Both these statements are too general to meet the requirements of modern conditions. The laws of Michigan, British Columbia, and New Brunswick go to the other extreme and define game birds as "any birds protected by this act," and those of Nova Scotia as certain enumerated birds and animals. Such definitions are open to the objections that they may include many species which are not legitimate game, that they may not include one-half or even one-fourth of the kinds of game actually found within the State, and furthermore that they are subject to constant change with each new amendment as species are added to or stricken from the list.¹ The groups of animals and birds which may be considered legitimate game are well marked and comparatively few in number and may easily be so defined as to avoid the objections just mentioned.

The game of North America is practically limited to four groups of mammals and four of birds. The game mammals are (1) 'big game' or ruminants and peccaries (Ungulata); (2) bears and raccoons² (Carnivora); (3) rabbits and squirrels (Rodentia); and (4) opossums² (Marsupialia). Game birds, as defined by the American Ornithologists' Union, comprise (1) Anatidæ, commonly known as swans, geese, brant, and ducks; (2) Rallidæ, including rails, coots, mud hens, and gallinules; (3) Limicolæ, or shore birds, comprising plover, snipe, woodcock, sandpipers, and curlew; and (4) Gallinæ, including wild turkeys, grouse, prairie chickens, pheasants, partridges, and quail. Certain mammals and birds are sometimes classed as game which, for various reasons, might preferably be otherwise regarded. Among such mammals may be mentioned ground squirrels, muskrats, and woodchucks; and among birds, cranes, wild pigeons, doves, flickers, night hawks or bull bats, meadowlarks, reedbirds, blackbirds, and robins. Ground squirrels, muskrats, and woodchucks are not held in high estimation for the table, nor are they usually hunted for sport. Cranes, pigeons, and doves are ordinarily considered legitimate game, but are now so rare that in many States they have been practically removed from the game list. Flickers, night hawks, meadowlarks, blackbirds,³ and robins are insectivorous, and although considered good eating, are far too valuable to be killed for sport or market. Reedbirds or bobolinks, while regarded as pests in the South and highly esteemed as song birds in the North, are treated as game in five States along the middle Atlantic coast, where they are neither particularly beneficial nor injurious. They may, perhaps, be properly added to the list in those States.

² These animals are seldom mentioned in game laws. As a rule, bears are accorded no protection, though in Quebec they have a close season like other game.

A good beginning has already been made toward securing the general adoption of a uniform definition of game birds. The definition proposed by the American Ornithologists' Union, which restricts the term to four easily recognized groups, has now been accepted by the District of Columbia and ten States—Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware, Florida, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Wyoming. It has been slightly modified by adding reedbirds and blackbirds to the list of species in the District of Columbia, reedbirds to the New Jersey list, and doves to the Florida and Illinois lists.

HISTORY.

Laws relating to game in America date back almost to the first settlement of the colonies. One of the earliest is found in the Massachusetts Bay colonial ordinance of 1641, as amended in 1647, which provides that "for great ponds lying in common, though within the bounds of some town, it shall be free for any man to fish and fowl there, and may pass and repass on foot through any man's property for that end, so that they trespass not upon any man's corn or meadow." This law was in force in the whole Colony of Massachusetts, which at that time included much of the territory now covered by the State of Maine. It has been the basis of several decisions rendered in recent years by the Maine courts, which have held that anyone may go to great ponds on foot through uninclosed woodlands, but may not cross tillage or mowing land; that a great pond is one containing more than 10 acres,¹ and that such ponds belong to the State.² As early as 1699 Virginia passed an act (II William III) prohibiting the killing of deer between January and July under a penalty of 500 pounds of tobacco. Maryland followed in 1730 with a provision prohibiting "any person (Indians in amity with us excepted), between January first and July last, to kill any deer under the penalty of 400 pounds of tobacco;" and South Carolina, in 1769, prohibited killing of deer during the same period under a penalty of 40 shillings proclamation money. Both the Maryland and South Carolina acts prohibited night hunting with fire light, as did also the early statutes of Mississippi Territory.³ The earliest game laws in Kentucky were passed in 1775, and their author was Daniel Boone; the earliest in New York in 1791.³ The New York law fixed a penalty of 20 shillings for killing heath hen, partridge, quail, or woodcock on Long Island or in the city and county of New York.

In the nineteenth century game laws multiplied rapidly. In 1864 they were in force in eighteen States and the District of Columbia, in 1874 in twenty-four, and during the last quarter of the century they were extended to practically every State and Territory and to most of the Provinces of Canada. The simple provisions of the earlier statutes are no longer sufficient, and the modern game laws of some of the States are really codes covering such subjects as seasons, methods of capturing game of all kinds, conditions for shipping to market, sale, permits to collect scientific specimens, taking, keeping, and shipping birds and animals for propagation, employment of guides, duties of game commissioners and wardens, besides various provisions necessary for enforcement, such as search, seizure, and disposition of game. These laws are subject to such frequent change that in certain States scarcely a session of the legislature passes without the enactment of amendments of some kind. In 1879 New York adopted a complete and carefully prepared statute which remained in force for fifteen years or more, but by 1895 no less than 214 amendments or special acts had been passed, and the original law was greatly obscured.¹

Without attempting to follow the development of game legislation in detail, the growth of game laws may be illustrated by briefly sketching the changes in those of Maine, now one of the foremost States in legislation of this kind. The first State law of Maine was apparently that of March 16, 1830, which prohibited killing deer and moose between January 1 and September 1, under a penalty of $15. This season was subsequently modified at intervals (see below), but the list of protected game was not extended until 1863, when a close season was provided for quail between March 1 and September 1, and for woodcock between March 1 and July 4.² In 1866 protection was given fur-bearing animals, including mink, beaver, sable, fisher, otter, and muskrats. In 1870 protection was accorded caribou, and the bird list was extended by the addition of grouse or partridges, snipe, and a few insectivorous birds, such as larks, robins, swallows, and sparrows. The capture of ducks except with firearms was prohibited. In 1879 plover were added to the game list and a close season (May 1 to September 1), which remained in force for twenty years, was established for wood ducks, dusky or black ducks, and sea ducks. In 1883 the non-game bird list was extended to include orioles or other insectivorous birds, and finally, in 1901, was made to include all wild birds other than game, except crows, hawks, owls, and English sparrows.

As early as 1852 it became necessary to have special officers to enforce the game laws, and county moose wardens were appointed, but in the following year these were replaced by county and town moose wardens. In 1880 the board of commissioners of inland fisheries and game was established, now consisting of three commissioners.

Thus, by gradual stages, from the simple prohibition of 1830 against killing deer and moose, has been developed the comprehensive law in force to-day protecting all the big game and nearly all the birds found within the State, and prescribing the times and methods for their capture. The close seasons have undergone numerous changes during the seventy years, but those for moose and deer are much the same as they were originally, having merely lengthened a little at each end. As a matter of interest, the different close seasons for big game from 1830 to date are here tabulated:

LEGISLATION OF 1901.

The opening year of the new century has witnessed an unprecedented interest in game protection. Nearly four-fifths of the States and Territories have enacted some amendments to their game laws. These amendments vary from a slight change in the Delaware law regarding close seasons to the adoption of a general game law or code in Arizona, California, Connecticut, Indiana, Michigan, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, and New Jersey. Changes in dates for opening or closing the seasons have been very general, but restrictions on methods of capture, on sale, shipment, and storage, have also been numerous. In many instances the laws have necessarily become more complex, but there has been a strong tendency toward extending protection to more kinds of game, shortening the seasons, limiting bags, and throwing greater restrictions about the trade in game. Nebraska and Missouri, which suffered severely from wholesale shipments of game last year, have joined the great majority of States in adopting stringent nonexport laws, leaving less than half a dozen States now without protection of this kind. (See Pl. VIII.) Other States, notably Indiana, Montana, Nebraska, Pennsylvania, and Washington, have restricted hunting by requiring licenses of non-resident hunters, a common method, particularly in the Middle West, for providing a game protection fund. Nebraska, South Dakota, and Washington have followed the example of Michigan, Minnesota, North Dakota, and Wisconsin in requiring residents as well as non-residents to obtain licenses, and Oregon now licenses nonresident market hunters. All the Northern States from the Alleghenies to the Pacific with three exceptions now require nonresident hunters to secure licenses at a cost of $10 to $40. (See pp. 46-49.)

Perhaps the most hopeful sign of the times is the general recognition of the principle that game preservation is a national rather than a local question. The progress made in many States is the outcome of well-directed efforts toward the attainment of a common definite object, rather than the passage of purely local measures. Organized effort has accomplished more this year than ever before. The American Ornithologists' Union, interested especially in the preservation of nongame birds, has secured the enactment of a practically uniform law in eight States and the District of Columbia, and incidentally the adoption of a uniform definition of game birds. The League of American Sportsmen has given attention especially to securing better protection for big game and wild turkeys, and its efforts have contributed to the passage of bills providing a close season of three to ten years for antelope in six States, for elk in five States, and for mountain sheep and wild turkeys in two States. It has supported the principle advocated by several leading sportsmen's journals that protection can best be secured by restricting the sale of game and limiting the amount of a day's or season's bag. The influence thus exerted, combined with the aid of various other game organizations, was largely instrumental in securing the passage of numerous laws embodying these features. The sale of all kinds of game has been prohibited by three States, and that of certain species by seven others. As a result of efforts in this direction, three kinds of game—antelope, elk, and prairie chickens—have been practically removed from the markets, except in States where their killing is still permitted. (See pp. 38, 54.)

Among the novel features of legislation may be mentioned a unique statute enacted in Maine to prevent criminal carelessness in hunting, with a view to decreasing the deplorable accidents which have occurred with such unnecessary frequency in the past few years. This law provides that "Whoever while on a hunting trip, or in pursuit of wild game or game birds, negligently or carelessly shoots and wounds or kills any human being shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding ten years or by fine not exceeding $1,000."¹ Other new features include the requirement of Nevada that the game laws shall be read in the public schools at least twice during each year; various measures relative to game introduction; and provisions for establishing game preserves. Maine has adopted the precaution of requiring persons who wish to import live animals or birds to first secure a permit from the State authorities, in order that undesirable species may be prevented from gaining a foothold. New York has made provision for restocking the Adirondack region with moose, and has appropriated the sum of $5,000 for this purpose. Connecticut, in an 'Act concerning the establishment of State game preserves,'¹ has authorized the commissioners of fisheries and game, upon petition of five resident landowners of any town, to lease tracts of woodland suitable for propagation of game, for terms of twenty-five or fifty years, at an annual rental not to exceed $5 for each preserve.²

Washington has followed the initiative taken by Colorado in cooperating with the Federal authorities to secure better enforcement of the game laws on the forest reserves by making all forest rangers ex officio game wardens. Forest rangers in Colorado have been invested with the same authority as deputy wardens for two years, but this was done by a regulation of the State game commissioner³ and not by a provision in the game law, as is the case in Washington. South Dakota has adopted a provision allowing only deputy game wardens to serve as guides.

Among the numerous changes it is but natural to find some examples of retrograde legislation, but these are partly due to errors of omission in the new laws, by which certain birds are deprived of the protection they formerly enjoyed. Arizona has failed to provide a season for killing doves, but has, however, prohibited their sale. Connecticut has extended the open season for rail from January 1 to April 1, apparently for the sake of conformity with the newly established season for plover and snipe, thus permitting sale, if not shooting, in the spring. Illinois, through an unfortunate omission, failed to provide any close season for quail, woodcock, or rail, but the sale of quail is still prohibited under the old law. Indiana and Kansas, which formerly protected doves at all times, have established open seasons from August 15 to January 1, and from July 15 to September 15, respectively. New Jersey has omitted deer,⁴ and Oregon, snipe from the new laws. Rhode Island, in amending the duck season, has removed protection entirely from rail, snipe, plover, geese, and certain ducks, and has lengthened the open season for other ducks to April 1, thus permitting spring shooting.

On the whole, the legislation of 1901 is a distinct advance over that of any previous year, but much still remains to be done in the way of making proper provision for transportation of live game for propagation, in extending greater protection to shore birds, woodcock, and turkeys, which are becoming greatly diminished in numbers and are threatened with extermination in certain localities, and especially in protecting wild fowl during the spring when they are on the way to their breeding grounds. A comparison of Plates I and II will show that in the greater part of the United States ducks have very little protection. Many of the species breed in the far North and do not occur in the United States during summer. Yet nine States in the South and West accord wild fowl practically no protection, and a number of others have close seasons of only four or five months duration, chiefly during the time when the birds are absent from the State. On the other hand a few States realize the necessity for greater protection and are making strenuous efforts in this direction. During the present year Wisconsin has successfully maintained the anti-spring shooting law on its statute books and its example has been followed by Michigan, which has closed its season a full month earlier than before. Maine also has put an end to spring shooting of ducks. Including these, six border States and three provinces of Canada—Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, New Brunswick, Ontario, and Manitoba—have now united in prohibiting spring duck shooting.

² A somewhat similar provision has been in force for several years in Ontario, by which the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council is authorized to designate certain counties or portions of counties in which it is unlawful to hunt or kill deer at any time, thus in effect establishing deer preserves.

Public sentiment against spring shooting is gradually gaining ground, but the States which have been able to crystallize this sentiment into law are still few in number. It seems difficult to make the public appreciate the fact that migratory game must receive at least as much protection as is accorded resident game if it is to be saved from extermination. Many persons who are strongly in favor of prohibiting spring shooting, and who appreciate the difficulty of passing such a law in their own State, have suggested a national law as the only solution of the question. This is impracticable, since the fixing of times and seasons for taking game is a matter solely within the jurisdiction of the States, a prerogative which they jealously guard, and one which both State and Federal courts recognize. Only five years ago the Supreme Court of the United States expressly declared that "the power of the State to control and regulate the taking of game can not be questioned."¹ The remedy lies in concerted action on the part of individuals and associations in neighboring States, all working for the attainment of a common object. In such a movement the Provinces of Canada have shown their willingness to join by making their laws conform in many respects to those of adjoining States.² The Province of Ontario has even gone so far as to provide in its game-protection act of 1900 that when any migratory game bird is in danger of extinction and its killing and sale have been prohibited in two or more States lying south of the Province, one being New York, Pennsylvania, or Michigan, the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council may extend the same protection to Ontario for the same period during which the bird is protected in such States (see p. 144).

The need of greater uniformity, particularly in seasons, has long been recognized, and the success which has attended the efforts in this direction during the present year gives new importance to the suggestions made a few years ago in an outline of cooperative game legislation known as the Hallock Code.

A STEP TOWARD UNIFORMITY—THE HALLOCK CODE.

In an address before the National Game, Bird, and Fish Protective Association¹ in 1897 Mr. Charles Hallock advocated a code of cooperative legislation, in accordance with which the United States was to be divided into three 'concessions,'² in each of which the laws were to be as uniform as possible, the open seasons identical, and protection was to be accorded to insectivorous birds, but withheld from a few species considered injurious.

The feature of special interest in this connection is the simple manner in which the States were grouped together. The three concessions were named Northern, Southern, and Pacific, and as originally proposed were limited as follows: All the region west of the crest of the Rocky Mountains was included in the Pacific, while all that east of this range was divided at latitude $36^{\circ} 30'$ into a Northern and a Southern concession. This division, however, had the disadvantage of cutting through Colorado and New Mexico, thus giving each a double set of laws. Moreover, the Pacific concession extended from Puget Sound to the Mexican boundary and embraced wide extremes of climate. The scheme has therefore been slightly modified, for present purposes, by extending the Northern concession over the whole of Colorado and allowing the Southern to include not only all of New Mexico, but also Arizona (see Pl. III). This places all the region south of latitude $36^{\circ} 30'$ (except part of southern California) in one division. All the States east of the Rocky Mountains with these exceptions belong to the Northern or Southern concessions, while California, Idaho, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, and Washington form the Pacific. For a simple division this seems to meet all requirements fairly well, and while it may not be practicable to secure identical laws in all the States in each group, a strong effort should at least be made to have the close seasons correspond as nearly as possible.

RESTRICTIONS AS TO TIME OF KILLING GAME.

Restrictions as to time of killing game may be grouped under two general heads: Close seasons proper or the part of the year in which game is protected, and close terms in which protection extends over several years. In the latter case the species so protected are to all intents and purposes temporarily removed from the game list.

CLOSE SEASONS.

No question in game protection is more important than that of the seasons during which birds and animals shall be protected, yet, strange to say, there is none in which State game laws show greater diversity and none in which they are more subject to change. Lack of uniformity often defeats the purpose of provisions intended to allow game an opportunity to recuperate and introduces needless confusion. Moreover, it makes compliance with the provisions of the Federal law difficult for shippers and game dealers, who must consider the open seasons in both the State in which their game is killed and that to which it is shipped. Further confusion results from diversity in defining the seasons. Some laws give the open seasons, others the closed, and in these statements may be found all possible varieties of inclusion and exclusion of the dates named.

An attempt is here made to bring together in one table all the close seasons for game prescribed by the various States and by the Provinces of Canada. For the sake of simplicity, a uniform method is used both in the arrangement of species and statement of seasons. In each case big game is first considered, then follow squirrels and rabbits; then upland game birds, such as quail, grouse, pheasants, turkeys, and doves; then shore birds; and finally water fowl, such as ducks, geese, and swans. In the statement of seasons only close seasons have been given, and in stating these the plan of the Vermont law, to include the first date but not the last, has been followed consistently. The Vermont scheme has the advantage of showing readily both the open and close seasons, since either may be obtained by reading the other backward. Thus, when the close season is stated as December 1 to October 1, the open season begins October 1 and ends December 1 (in each case the last date being excluded).

In some States certain days of the week constitute additional close seasons throughout the term in which killing is permitted. Sundays constitute a close season for all game in Maine, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Allegany

MAP SHOWING DIVISIONS PROPOSED BY HALLOCK CODE.

The States and Territories are so grouped that game seasons may be uniform, or nearly so, in each division.

County, Md., the District of Columbia, North Carolina, Alabama, Florida, Ohio, Indiana, and the Indian Territory, and in Manitoba, Ontario, New Brunswick, and Newfoundland. Mondays also constitute a close season for ducks in Ohio; Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays for wild fowl in Carteret County, N. C., and Wednesdays and Saturdays for wild fowl in Currituck County, N. C. Similar exceptions are made for wild fowl in Anne Arundel, Cecil, Dorchester, and Harford counties, Md., and in Connecticut for wild fowl at certain points on the Housatonic River and Long Island Sound.

These special exceptions and the county laws of Alabama and Mississippi, of which no recent compilation is available, are not given in the following table; but otherwise the table may be regarded as a practically complete résumé of the regulations now in force. It is based primarily on the summary contained in 'Game Laws in Brief,' and has been corrected to August 1, 1901. The section relating to Maryland county laws has been taken from the abstract prepared by the Maryland Game and Fish Protective Association. That for North Carolina is based on the synopsis of the game laws published by the secretary of the State Board of Agriculture,¹ supplemented by the Public Laws of 1901. That relating to Tennessee county laws has been compiled directly from the code of 1896 and the session laws of 1897 and 1899. Finally, the section for Virginia has been compiled from the codes of 1887 and supplement of 1900, and the session laws of 1888-1900.

The difficulty of securing absolute accuracy in a table of this kind is very great, and the absence in the laws of many States of express legislation as to the inclusion or exclusion of the dates beginning and ending the seasons makes exactness almost an impossibility.

Close seasons.

[The close seasons include the first date, but not the last. To find the open seasons reverse the dates. No close season is prescribed by State laws for any game not mentioned in the list. Seasons which apply only to special counties are given in the middle column. See also tables at end of bulletin.]

Zone No. 2 comprises the part of said counties east and north of the Saguenay.GAME PROTECTED FOR A TERM OF YEARS.

The right of the State to prohibit absolutely the killing of game has been upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States,¹ and is now generally recognized. Two conditions are considered necessary to justify the complete withdrawal of open seasons for several years—(1) when game has been killed off to such an extent that a period of recuperation is required to save it from extermination, and (2) when game is introduced into a new locality and time is needed for it to become established amid new surroundings. The first condition is chiefly exemplified in the case of big game; the second in the case of introduced game birds.

Big game.—The big game of the United States is rapidly disappearing. Buffalo are almost extinct; elk, moose, caribou, antelope, mountain sheep, and mountain goats are now found in only a few States, and deer are rare in many places where they should be common. To such an extent has this decrease advanced that vigorous measures are now necessary to prevent absolute extermination of several of the species, and, with the exception of deer, big game has been very generally accorded protection for several years to come. To this end legislation has been enacted prohibiting slaughter for hides, materially shortening open seasons, limiting the number of individuals which may be killed, forbidding sale and shipment at all times, and prohibiting shooting indefinitely or for a term of years.

The effect of such measures is well shown in the case of deer in Vermont. One hundred years ago deer were common, but seventy-five years of lax protection nearly exterminated them in the central and southern parts of the State. A continuous close season was then established, which remained in force until 1896. In that year an open season for the month of October was provided, which in 1898 was reduced to the last ten days of October. Fostered by these and other stringent protective laws, deer have increased during the last quarter of a century until at present they have become abundant, and complaints are sometimes made of the damage which they cause to crops.¹

During the present year all big-game hunting has been prohibited in Nevada, New Hampshire, and New Mexico; close seasons for deer have been established or extended in Connecticut, Indiana, and Illinois; elk have been protected for a term of years in Michigan, Minnesota, and Nebraska; antelope in Arizona, Montana, and South Dakota, and moose and caribou in Montana. As shown in the following table, 28 States and 4 Provinces now prohibit killing of all or certain kinds of big game:

² South of township 25 and east of range 24 west of the second meridian. In other words, approximately that part of Assiniboia east of Pasqua Junction and south of the Qu'Appelle River.

Besides these restrictions, both does and fawns are very generally protected, and in Nebraska and Vermont deer without horns are protected at all times. In 7 States and 2 Canadian Provinces the open season for deer has been reduced to 30 days or less; in Arizona, Pennsylvania, and Quebec (Pontiac and Ottawa counties) to 30; Michigan 23, North Dakota 21, Minnesota and Wisconsin 20, Ontario 15, and Vermont 10, while the open season for elk in Colorado is reduced to 12, for moose and caribou in Minnesota to 5, and for deer on Long Island to only 4 days.

In view of the extent of the protection accorded big game, it is interesting to note where hunting is still permitted. In Canada big game is more abundant than in the United States, and except in Ontario and part of Assiniboia most of the species can be killed wherever they occur. Aside from deer, which are now protected in 11 States, big game may be killed in this country in only 12 States and Territories. The number which may be killed is limited and export is prohibited in practically all the States where such game occurs. West of the Mississippi elk can be killed only in South Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, Idaho, and Washington; moose in Minnesota, Oregon, and Alaska; caribou in Minnesota and Alaska; antelope in Nebraska, Wyoming, Colorado, Idaho, and Washington; mountain sheep in South Dakota, Wyoming, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, and Alaska; and mountain goats in Montana, Wyoming, Idaho, Washington, and Alaska. The States and Provinces in which big-game hunting is still permitted (arranged geographically for ready comparison), the open seasons and the limitations as to number, are shown in the following table:

Birds.—In the case of game birds the necessity for absolute protection is not so apparent, and close seasons extending over several years have been accorded to comparatively few species. The terms usually vary from 2 to 10 years, and are renewed when necessary. The Province of Ontario has a provision which authorizes the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council to prohibit the hunting or sale of any game animal or non-migratory game bird in need of greater protection than is provided by statute.¹ This prohibition may be made for any year or any season. A measure of this kind is a valuable safeguard in case the legislature fails to grant close seasons for introduced game birds or in cases where the close terms expire between legislative sessions.

Six States and British Columbia have now withdrawn open seasons for quail. 4 States and Ontario those for wild turkeys. Doves are protected indefinitely in 15 States and in 2 Provinces of Canada, mainly because they are not regarded as legitimate game.

STATES (DOTTED) WHICH PROTECT INTRODUCED PHEASANTS FOR A TERM OF YEARS.

For details, see page 39.

Pheasants and other foreign game birds are almost always given a close season of several years after introduction. They are protected in 30 States (see Pl. IV). In Oregon, so far as the ring-neck pheasant is concerned, this protection is confined to the region east of the Cascades and some of the counties in the western part of the State, but several other pheasants are protected in all the counties. Protection without limit is in force in California, Colorado, Indiana, Montana, Nebraska, Utah, British Columbia, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and some of the counties of Virginia. The periods expire in 1902 in Idaho, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, and Texas (thus leaving the birds without protection for nearly a year, as the legislatures do not meet in these States until 1903); in 1903 in South Carolina and Wisconsin; in 1904 in Alabama, Minnesota, and Oklahoma; in 1905 in Georgia, Massachusetts, New York, North Dakota, Oregon, Washington (east of the Cascades), Rhode Island, and Ontario; in 1906 in Connecticut, Illinois, Nevada, New Mexico, and Wyoming; in 1910 in Michigan, and in 1911 in Maine. These terms of protection are shown in the following table:

RESTRICTIONS AS TO METHODS OF HUNTING.

Restrictions on methods of hunting are exceedingly numerous, and apply not only to the use of guns, boats, and dogs, but also to time, place, and conditions governing the killing of game. An attempt is here made to bring together the more important and more general of these restrictions and to group them in logical order. A somewhat arbitrary division has been adopted by placing the prohibitions under two main headings: (1) Restrictions on outfits or implements for hunting, including guns, ammunition, boats, blinds and other deceptive devices, lights for night hunting, dogs, ferrets, and weasels; (2) restrictions surrounding hunting, such as trapping, netting and snaring, night shooting, and killing game in snow. Limits placed on bags and requirements regarding licenses, although properly belonging to this general subject, are of enough importance to warrant separate consideration.

OUTFITS.

Restrictions on guns relate chiefly to size. A number of States prohibit the use of swivel or pivot guns in the killing of wild fowl, and many limit the size of the gun that may be used for shooting any game. The term 'big gun' as used in this connection may be defined as a gun larger than No. 10, except in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, where the maximum legal size is No. 8. Under restrictions on boats, four divisions are made: (1) Boats propelled by naphtha, gasoline, oil, steam, electricity, or similar motive power; (2) sailboats; (3) sneak boats, used in wild-fowl shooting, and (4) skiffs. Under the head of deceptive devices are included batteries, sink boxes, sink boats, sunken punts, bough houses, blinds, and all other kinds of stationary or floating ambush, whether on shore or in the water. Under the head of artificial light are included in two columns restrictions on the hunting of big game with lights, or 'jacking,' as it is commonly called, and laws prohibiting the use of fire or light of any kind in the hunting of wild fowl. The prohibitions in regard to the use of dogs are arranged under three heads: Hounding, practicing, and permitting to run at large. While hounding strictly relates to the chasing of deer and other big game, the term is here used to include also the hunting of birds with dogs. Under practicing are grouped restrictions against the use of dogs in close season, chiefly in training them to hunt birds.

The restrictions against permitting dogs to run at large are such as relate to allowing them to roam in localities where they may disturb game. In Idaho, Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont the possession of deerhounds within the State is made unlawful, and New York prohibits their possession in Adirondack Park. The use of ferrets and weasels in hunting rabbits and hares is interdicted in a few States.

CONDITIONS.

Trapping, snaring, and netting are prohibited by many States, which recognize that these methods cause rapid extermination of game. Commission houses sometimes encourage the trapping of quail, as the game is in better condition for sale when trapped than when shot; but this is very properly discountenanced, and some States make it an offense to offer for sale birds which show no evidence of having been taken otherwise than by trapping. Several States specifically prohibit the use of grain or other food that has been soaked in opium or other narcotics, or in poison, for the purpose of stupefying or killing birds. Night shooting is treated under two heads—big game and water fowl. In the different laws night is variously defined, but it usually is designated as from one hour after sunset to one hour before sunrise. Killing in the snow includes what is known as ‘crusting’ big game, or shooting it when it is ‘yarded,’ and tracking and shooting rabbits and upland birds when the ground is snow covered. The various restrictions, both in regard to outfits and concerning conditions of hunting, are shown in the following table:

In addition to these restrictions there are numerous others which are too local to find a place in the table. Colorado and Nebraska prohibit the use of steel or hard-pointed bullets. North Carolina prohibits the use of decoys for wild fowl in Currituck Sound from March 31 to November 10; Ontario requires that they shall be placed more than 75 feet from shore or natural cover, and Quebec prohibits leaving them at night near a cache, boat, or bank. Three States—Washington, Maryland, and North Carolina—specifically prohibit disturbing wild fowl on their bedding or feeding grounds. North Carolina has numerous other provisions relating to the hunting of wild fowl in Currituck County, such as leaving landing or anchorage or putting out decoys before sunrise, boating on Currituck Sound on Sunday to locate wild fowl for a future day, remaining near citizens who are shooting, with the purpose of interfering with their sport, and skiffing and ring-shooting boobies and ruddy ducks during the period from November 10 to February 15. New York, Connecticut, and Manitoba make it unlawful to place any traps where birds may be caught and provide that traps may be destroyed by anyone. Michigan and Manitoba prohibit the use of baited hooks in taking game, and Michigan also proscribes the use of any pit, pitfall, deadfall, scaffold, cage, or any similar device in hunting. Connecticut, Michigan, and Missouri find it necessary to provide against the use of explosives in the taking of certain game, wild turkeys and geese being specified in the Missouri law and gray squirrels and rabbits in the Connecticut law. Connecticut also forbids the use of fire, sulphur, and brimstone by squirrel or rabbit hunters. In Alabama, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, and Ontario (in the Indian Peninsula) it is unlawful to kill big game while it is in the water, and in Wisconsin also while it is on the ice. North Dakota, Washington, Wisconsin, and Manitoba prohibit spring-guns.

Shooting from a highway is prohibited by five States—Colorado, Iowa (quail), Nebraska, New York, and West Virginia. New York also prohibits shooting from the lands of any railway or lands purchased or condemned for the Croton aqueduct in Westchester County; and West Virginia has a prohibition against shooting on another's land, near occupied dwellings. Nonresidents hunting in Maine, South Dakota, and Wyoming must be accompanied by guides, and in the last two States it is required that these guides be deputy game wardens. In the use of guides a distinction is generally made between residents and nonresidents, the employment of the latter being often possible only on payment of a license fee; while in Newfoundland it is specifically prohibited. Ontario prohibits shooting for hire or hiring any one to shoot, but declares that this is not intended to interfere with the bona fide employment of a guide. Restrictions intended to prevent the waste of game that has been legitimately killed are imposed by a few States. Colorado prohibits using game for bait, Colorado and Quebec forbid wasting game, and Nova Scotia requires hunters who kill moose or caribou to carry the flesh out of the woods within ten days.

Shippers and carriers, no less than sportsmen, are directly concerned in the foregoing provisions of the laws of the various States and Territories, as the Lacey Act prohibits, under heavy penalty, interstate commerce in game killed in violation of law. Game killed by illegal methods can no more be shipped from State to State than that taken out of season.

LIMITS OF GAME BAGS.

Twenty-four States have attempted to prevent wanton destruction of game by limiting the amount which may be killed in a day or season. These States comprise the northern tier, from Maine to Washington, and Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Florida, Indiana, Iowa, South Dakota, Nebraska, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, California, and Oregon. (See Pl. V.) Similar restrictions are common in the Canadian laws. Limits as to number have been placed mainly on big game and upland game birds, but in a few cases have been extended to woodcock, rail, and wild fowl. In Colorado, North Dakota, and Nebraska practically all the game of the State is limited, while in Iowa the limit applies to game birds, but not to big game. Michigan, New Hampshire, Utah, and Wisconsin limit only the number of deer, three being allowed each hunter in Michigan and two in New Hampshire, Wisconsin, and Utah. The highest limit for big game is in Montana, where six deer or mountain goats may be killed in a season. The maximum for any species of game bird in a day is 70 sandpipers in Maine, but the usual limit is 25 or 50.

Limits of a similar character and for the same object are also placed by several States on the number of birds which may be shipped at one time or in one season, usually corresponding to the number that may be killed, but seldom, in any event, exceeding 50 at a time. Florida prescribes the limit not only for each person, but also for each party, in order to prevent evasion of the law by several persons hunting together. Thus, four wild turkeys may be killed in a day by one person, but not more than six by a party. The following table shows the details of these restrictions:

LICENSES FOR HUNTING OR SHIPPING GAME.

In some sections of the United States, notably in Missouri, the privilege of hunting is not extended to nonresidents, and in Virginia it is unlawful for nonresidents to kill wild fowl in certain parts of the State.¹ In twenty-one States and everywhere in Canada licenses must be secured before nonresidents may hunt certain game or hunt at all. In nine States and two Canadian Provinces a like restriction is imposed on residents, but the fees are usually very much smaller and often merely nominal. Thus in Nebraska, South Dakota, Washington, and Wisconsin resident licenses cost $1, while nonresident licenses vary from $10 to $25, according to the State; in North Dakota and Michigan the fee for residents is 75 cents, while that for nonresidents is $25. In Minnesota 25 cents and $25 are the respective charges for licenses to shoot big game. In Wyoming the same distinction is observed in the issue of 'gun licenses' for hunting big game, residents being charged a fee of $1 and required to secure licenses only for shooting in counties other than those in which they reside, while nonresidents pay $40 for the privilege of hunting anywhere within the State. Some of the Canadian licenses are even more expensive. British Columbia demands $50 for a big-game license and Newfoundland $80 for a special caribou license. Minnesota has a special license with a fee of $25 for nonresidents from States that issue nonresident licenses; these States are shown in the table. (See Pl. VI.)

STATES (DOTTED) WHICH REQUIRE NONRESIDENTS TO OBTAIN HUNTING LICENSES.

The fee for the license is shown in each case. In Arkansas and Oregon licenses are required only in connection with market hunting. For other details, see pages 46-50.

Licenses are generally issued only for the season, and thus expire at a fixed date. In six States—Florida, Iowa, Maryland, South Dakota, Washington, and West Virginia—they are good only in a single county, and the fees for these county licenses vary from $1 to $25. In Nebraska a resident is required to secure a license to hunt in any county other than that in which he resides. In Maryland there is much variation, as each county is subject to a separate law; Allegany, Anne Arundel, Calvert, Frederick, Montgomery, Washington, Wicomico, and Worcester counties have no license laws. Some of the counties of Maryland and Virginia require nonresidents to secure permission from landowners before hunting, and in North Carolina a general provision (Code of 1883, sec. 2831) prohibits anyone from hunting on lands of another without permission from the owner. Certain counties in North Carolina go farther and require hunters to obtain written permits.¹ Occasionally the hunting privileges covered by these permits are sold to nonresidents in return for payment of taxes on the land or other consideration, and the permit becomes in effect a kind of nonresident license, but with this difference, that it allows shooting only on a certain tract of land instead of in the whole county or State.

In some States licenses are required only for hunting certain kinds of game. Thus in Michigan they are issued only for hunting deer, in Maine for deer and moose, in Florida for deer, quail, and turkeys, and in South Dakota for big game. In part of Dare County, N. C., license fees of $25 are required of club houses before members may shoot wild fowl.² In Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, and Wisconsin licenses carry with them the privilege of shipping out of the State a limited amount of game, but generally require that it shall be properly marked or accompanied by the owner. In Maine dealers are obliged to secure licenses before they can sell deer or buy, sell, or tan deer skins, and in Arkansas³ and Oregon licenses are issued to nonresident market hunters. Georgia permits its counties to require a

$25 license fee of market hunters. Colorado issues storage licenses at $1, importation licenses at $1, and park licenses at $1-$100. California, Colorado, and Oregon issue special permits upon application to the fish commissioners or game wardens, allowing shipment of game out of the State for breeding purposes. It might be well if the practice of issuing permits in the case of birds intended for propagation were more general. It is not in conflict with the spirit of nonexport laws, and under State supervision will hardly interfere with their proper enforcement, while, on the other hand, it may materially assist in obtaining a supply of birds for restocking covers in other States.

Details in regard to nonresident licenses are given in the following table. In a few States an additional clerk's fee, 25 cents to $1, is required to cover cost of issuing the license, but this item is not included in the fees given below.

²The Superior Court of Spokane has declared the license law of Washington unconstitutional, so far as it relates to residents of that State, on the ground that it discriminates in favor of persons under 16 years of age. (Am. Field, Vol. LVI, p. 164, Aug. 31, 1901.)

In this connection it may be well to call attention to the Canadian law regarding nonresident hunters. Those who visit Canada for the purpose of hunting, camping, etc., are required to deposit with the customs officer at the port of entry an amount equal to the duty (30 percent of appraised value) on such guns, canoes, tents, cooking utensils, kodaks, etc., as they take with them. If these articles, properly identified, are taken out within six months at the same port at which they were carried in, the deposit will be returned. But members of shooting or fishing clubs that own preserves in Canada and have filed a guarantee with the Canadian commissioner of customs, may present club membership certificates in lieu of making the deposit. They must, however, pay duty on all ammunition and provisions carried in.

RESTRICTIONS AS TO PURPOSES FOR WHICH GAME MAY BE KILLED.

Not only are limits set to the time for killing game and the methods of hunting, but in many instances the killing or possession of game for certain purposes is prohibited. Restrictions of this kind may be conveniently considered under the four heads 'Market hunting,' 'Killing for hides,' 'Possession and storage,' and 'Sale.'

MARKET HUNTING.

Traffic in game, especially since the advent of railroads in the West and the introduction of modern methods of refrigeration, has grown to large proportions, and in several instances threatens with extermination some of the most valuable game in the United States. The amount killed for sport or for food, however large it may be, is small in comparison with that killed for market. With a view to preventing extermination of their game, some States have prohibited killing for sale, and others the sale of all game taken within the State or protected by its laws. Ohio prohibits killing for sale of squirrel, quail, ruffed grouse or pheasant, prairie chicken, wild turkey, Mongolian, English or ring-neck pheasant, and woodcock; Pennsylvania, deer, elk, quail, partridge, grouse, pheasant, wild turkey, and woodcock; Indiana, quail, ruffed grouse, and pinnated grouse; Iowa, these and woodcock; Tennessee, deer, quail or partridge; Wyoming, big game. The Province of Ontario prohibits the employment of any one to kill game for sale; and Nebraska and the Indian Territory the slaughter of game for any purpose except food. In many States that do not absolutely prohibit killing for sale, such killing is greatly restricted by laws requiring hunters to secure licenses, and limiting the number that may be killed (see pp. 44-50). Oregon requires nonresident market hunters to obtain a special license, the fee for which is $10. Georgia has a general law forbidding killing for sale, except under license, but it is not operative in any county until recommended by the grand jury of that county.

KILLING FOR HIDES.

Killing for hides may be regarded as a special phase of market hunting and one which has proved extremely destructive to big game in certain States of the West. Of late years legislation has been directed toward stopping this source of waste. Wyoming prohibits purchase of hides or horns of deer, elk, moose, antelope, mountain sheep, and goat; and in some other States dealers are required to obtain special licenses for handling hides of deer and moose or other big game. (For restrictions on shipment of deer hides see page 60).

POSSESSION AND STORAGE.

One of the most important features of game legislation has been the gradual increase of provisions making the possession of game out of season an offense. Prohibitions against killing can be enforced only against the hunter, who may be merely the agent of the dealer; but penalties for possession can be enforced alike against hunter and dealer, agent and employer. The enforcement of such provisions has given rise to cases which have been carried to the highest courts. Acknowledgment has been slow of the principle that States can impose restrictions on possession of game,¹ or that birds lawfully purchased in open season can become contraband simply by being kept a few days in storage. It is unnecessary here to review the history of this litigation; but reference may be made to a case recently decided by the supreme court of Indiana, in which the appellant was convicted of having in his possession on February 5, 1900, a single quail, which he had obtained lawfully on December 30 previous and had kept in his refrigerator, notwithstanding that the law of Indiana prohibited possession of quail in that State after January 1. In deciding this case the court summarized the whole question briefly in the following words:

The individual has no natural right to take game, or to acquire property in it, and all the right he possesses or can possess in this respect is granted him by the State. The power to grant embodies the power to impose conditions. . . . The citizen when he accepts the State's grant, accepts it impressed with all the restrictions and limitations laid upon it, and when he acquires property under such license he does so with full notice of his qualified right; and so, if he loses that which he has taken, or held possession of, upon forbidden terms, he has lost nothing that belonged to him, and there has been no taking of property without due process of law, or without just compensation. (Smith v. State, 58 N. E. Reporter, 1045.)

Similar decisions have been rendered in Minnesota (State v. Rodman, 58 Minn. 393) and other western States. The supreme court of Missouri has even gone so far as to hold that under a law prohibiting possession during the close season, a contract on the part of a cold-storage company to keep game during the close season is illegal. (Haggerty v. St. Louis Ice Co., 44 S. W. 1114.) In Ontario game dealers are licensed, and, in addition to the regular license, are required to obtain a special license at a cost of $25 to keep game in cold storage during the close season.

The question of the status of imported game has been greatly simplified by the passage by Congress of the Lacey Act; and in this connection attention may again be called to section 5 of that act, which provides that all game imported into any State becomes subject to the operation of the laws of that State (provided they are broad enough to cover it) to the same extent and in the same manner as if produced in that State.

SALE.

Thirty-two States and Territories and 6 Provinces of Canada now prohibit the sale of all or certain kinds of game at all seasons. There has been a steady increase in the prohibitions against sale, and during the past year such provisions have been enacted by Arizona, California, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nevada, New Hampshire, North and South Dakota, and Quebec.

In Arizona, Idaho, Kansas, Michigan, Montana, and Nevada the sale of all game protected by the State law is prohibited. In Massachusetts and New Hampshire the sale of ruffed grouse or partridge, and woodcock is forbidden; in South Dakota, big game; in Minnesota, quail, ruffed grouse, sharp-tailed grouse, prairie chicken, and all aquatic fowl; in California, Washington, and Manitoba, all big game and upland game; and in Ontario, quail, ruffed grouse or partridge, woodcock, and snipe. In some States, after the close of the open season, a few days are allowed in which to dispose of game. Such provisions prevail in Illinois, Iowa, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Ohio, and 5 Provinces of Canada. The right of the State to prohibit dealers from storing or selling game imported from other States has been hotly contested. While there has been diversity of opinion on this point, the majority of the decisions have sustained the State. Such decisions have been rendered in California (Ex parte Maier, 103 Cal. 476), the District of Columbia (Javins v. U. S., 11 App. D. C. 347), Illinois (Magner v. People, 97 Ill. 320), Maryland (Stevens v. State, 89 Md. 669), Michigan (People v. O'Neil, 68 N. W. Rep. 227), Missouri (State v. Judy, 7 Mo. App. 524), New York (Phelps v. Racey, 60 N. Y. 10), and in other States.

A decision of the same kind has recently been handed down by the United States circuit court in the district of Oregon.¹ A dealer in Portland had been convicted by the State of selling, contrary to the law of Oregon, certain trout purchased in Seattle, Wash. He was fined, and in default of payment was imprisoned. Application was thereupon made to the Federal court for a writ of habeas corpus, which was denied. In rendering this decision the court cited the case of Geer v. Connecticut,¹ and disposed of the question as follows:

The decision [Geer v. Connecticut] is based upon the fundamental distinction that exists between the qualified ownership in game and the perfect nature of ownership in other property. If game when reduced to possession became an article of property, in the ordinary sense of the word, it would belong to commerce; otherwise, it is a subject of control by the State, in the exercise of its police power. There is, in my opinion, no room to distinguish between the right to take game out of the State and the right to bring it within the State. Interstate traffic is affected as much in one case as in the other. It is not material that in one case the killing of game is discouraged by the limitation which the law puts upon its use, by prohibiting its exportation, while in the other the enforcement of the law against the taking of game is rendered practicable by making its possession for sale unlawful. The ultimate object sought in each case is the same, and the law in each case is a legitimate exercise of the police power of the State.

Illinois specifically provides that the sale of certain game imported from other States shall be lawful at certain seasons, although the same kind of game killed within the State can not be sold at any time. Missouri, New Mexico, and Pennsylvania restrict prohibitions against sale of game to that taken within the State. Nebraska permits the storage but not the sale of imported game during the close season in the State for similar game. In a few instances prohibitions against the sale of certain game are so general as to afford protection over a considerable area. Thus ruffed grouse can not be sold in New Brunswick, Ontario, Manitoba, Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Michigan, or Minnesota. Antelope can not now be shipped from any State, although they may still be killed in Colorado, Idaho, Nebraska, Oregon, Washington, and Wyoming. Practically every State in which prairie chickens occur has now prohibited their sale or export. Hence the exposure for sale of these birds in any State where they do not occur, as in any city east of Indianapolis, is strong indication of violation of law.

The following table is intended to show two very distinct things: (1) The species which each State and Province prohibits from sale at all seasons. (2) The extension of time beyond the limits of the regular open season allowed dealers in some States, to enable them to dispose of game on hand which can be lawfully sold within the State. The two lists have little in common except that they both come under the head of restrictions on sale of game.

SHIPMENT OF GAME.

Shipment is one of the most important subjects of game legislation. It controls the trade in game, and on this account deserves careful consideration. Some of the leading topics under this head are 'Marking packages,' 'Shipping within the State,' 'Export from the State,' and 'Transportation of game for propagation,' each of which is taken up in detail below.

MARKING PACKAGES.

Section 4 of the Lacey Act requires that every package containing game animals or birds when shipped by interstate commerce must be clearly marked so as to show the name and address of the shipper and the nature of the contents. The laws of Colorado, Connecticut, Michigan, Nebraska, Oregon, Wisconsin, New Brunswick, and Ontario likewise require packages of fish or game to bear a mark indicating the contents. Such general statements as 'game' or 'birds' are not sufficient to show the nature of the contents, and the marks should indicate not only the kind of game, but also, if possible, the amount in the package. Some of the shipping tags distributed by commission merchants are printed so that a list of the game and a space for the shipper's name appear on the back of the tag, and in some cases the address is replaced by a number, which is registered on the books of the consignee. When such a tag is tacked to the package the information regarding the shipper's address and the contents of the package is concealed while in transit, but is readily accessible to the consignee by removal of the tag and examination of the reverse side. These tags are in common use in the commission business, and are perfectly legitimate when used for the shipment of fruit and vegetables; but the shipping of game is different, and the shipper who uses such tags should be careful to write his name and address and a statement of the contents on the package or on the face of the tag to avoid the danger of becoming liable to the penalty provided for evasion of the Federal law.

Some of the State laws are very explicit on the subject of marking. Nebraska requires that all packages shall be labeled with the address of the consignor and the amount of each kind of game contained in the package, and provides a fine of $10 to $50 for omission of such marks. Michigan requires that all packages of game shall be plainly marked on the outside with the names of the consignor and consignee, the initial point of billing and destination, and an itemized statement of the quantity of game contained therein. Ontario exacts that all bags, boxes, and parcels, besides bearing a description of the contents and the name and address of the owner, must be so made as to show the contents. Several of the States require big game and game birds carried home by sportsmen to be marked with the owner's name, shipped as baggage, and transported open to view. It is a common practice to forward game by express under a false or misleading name, with the hope of avoiding suspicion; but in Nebraska and Wisconsin a false statement as to contents is punishable by a fine of $25 to $100 and in Oregon by a fine of $100 to $500 or imprisonment one to four months, or by both fine and imprisonment.

Railroad and express companies should call the attention of their agents to these provisions and insist that all packages be properly marked before shipment. In Nebraska common carriers are prohibited, under a penalty of $25 to $100, from receiving consignments of game not properly labeled. In Texas they may examine suspected packages, and in Arkansas they may cause them to be opened when necessary and may even refuse packages supposed to contain fish or game for export. In Wisconsin packages of fish or game not properly marked may be seized and sold by game wardens.

Various devices have been resorted to in evading nonexport laws. Game has been shipped in trunks, in butter kegs, or in boxes marked 'dressed poultry,' 'butter,' or 'household goods,' and in packages bearing cipher addresses or numbers or ingeniously concealed statements of contents. All such devices are clearly illegal, and when exposed through inspection by game wardens or deputy marshals render the shipper liable to the loss of his game, beside additional heavy penalties for evasion of the shipping laws.

SHIPMENT WITHIN THE STATE.

In the shipment of game a distinction is made between shipping within the State and exporting from the State. The majority of the States which prohibit export place no restriction on shipment within the State, but in the others various limitations exist. Delaware, Minnesota, Missouri, Texas, Kansas, and Nevada prohibit shipment of all or certain kinds of game within the State. Fourteen other States and one Province of Canada permit such shipment, but guard against abuses by numerous requirements. In eight of these—Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut, New York, Wisconsin, Iowa, Wyoming, and New Brunswick—shipment is allowed under hunters' licenses, usually on condition that the game be tagged, carried openly, and accompanied by the owner, though sometimes special exceptions are made to this rule. Thus, Maine forbids the transportation of moose, deer, and game birds from place to place unless accompanied by the owner, but provides for their shipment under tags sold by the commission of inland fisheries and game. The remaining seven States permit any person to ship game, but impose many restrictions with regard to such matters as marking packages, shipping open to view, etc. In States like Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, and Tennessee, which have special county legislation, laws concerning shipment of game usually relate to export from counties, though the last two prohibit export of quail from the State by general law. In like manner Delaware, Florida, and New York prohibit the shipment of certain game from the counties where killed; but these are exceptional, all other States treating the State as a unit. New Hampshire prohibits all shipment within the State of moose, caribou, and elk, but permits the shipment of deer under certain conditions when accompanied by the owner.¹ Vermont prohibits the general transportation of deer, but allows the owner to carry one deer with him, open to view and tagged. New York, while prohibiting general transportation of deer or venison from or through any county, allows one carcass to be shipped when accompanied by the owner, but does not permit more than two deer to be transported by the same person in one season. Woodcock, grouse, and quail likewise can not be transported in the State or brought into the State from a point 25 miles from the State line unless accompanied by the owner, and the latter is not permitted to transport more than 12 each of grouse or woodcock at one time, or 36 of each in one season.² Connecticut likewise prohibits transportation of quail, woodcock, and ruffed grouse in the State, except when accompanied by the actual owner, and limits the number of ruffed grouse which may be carried in any one year to 36. Iowa permits a person to ship to anyone within the State not more than 1 dozen game birds in one day during the open season, providing the shipper first makes affidavit that the birds have not been unlawfully killed or bought and are not being shipped for sale or profit, and furnishes a copy of the affidavit to accompany the shipment for the security of the carrier. The transportation for sale of quail in South Carolina and deer and upland game birds in Florida and North Dakota are also prohibited. In Florida transportation of game is further limited to the carrying by hunting parties of their own game to their homes in the State. New Brunswick forbids the transportation of moose, caribou, or deer, alive or dead, or the hides or any portion of these animals, unless tagged, and accompanied by the owner. An exception is made, however, in the case of scientific specimens and breeding stock, which may be transported under special permit of the surveyor-general. Nevada includes transporting among the prohibitions concerning all big game except male deer and antelope. Nebraska and Wisconsin prohibit the transportation of all game protected by the State; Texas, all domestic game; Wyoming, big game only; Kansas and Iowa, game birds only; Connecticut, upland game birds only; Missouri, upland game birds and deer; Vermont and Michigan, deer alone; Delaware, rabbits, quail, woodcock, and snipe, and Minnesota, all protected birds except woodcock and upland plover.

EXPORT FROM THE STATE.

Since the constitutionality of the Connecticut statute prohibiting export of certain game was established by the Supreme Court in 1896,¹ nonexport laws have been generally adopted, and at the present time nearly every State prohibits the export of certain kinds of game. (See Pl. VIII.) Kentucky, Louisiana, and Mississippi seem to have no such laws; Virginia also has no general State law, but several of the counties prohibit shipment.

In Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Nebraska, South Dakota, Wyoming, Colorado, Newfoundland, and possibly a few other States, sportsmen are allowed to carry a limited amount of game out of the State under special restrictions. In a few States exceptions to the laws prohibiting export are also made in the case of birds and animals intended for propagation. (See pp. 65-67.)

Deer can not be lawfully exported from Alabama, Florida, any of the States or Territories west of the Mississippi (except Montana, Kansas, Iowa, and Louisiana), or any of the States north of the Ohio and Potomac rivers (except Illinois, Ohio, Delaware, New Jersey, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts). In Montana they can not be sold; in Delaware they do not occur, and in Illinois, Iowa, New Jersey, Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island they are protected at all seasons indefinitely or for a term of years. The shipment of deer hides is prohibited by special provisions in the laws of California, Florida, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, and Wyoming; Washington and British Columbia prohibit killing deer for hides, and Ontario, British Columbia, New Brunswick, and Newfoundland allow shipment of green hides only under license. The shipping of other big game is so generally prohibited that, although antelope and elk may still be killed in half a dozen western States, they can not be exported. Consequently the sale of either antelope or elk in any market east of the Mississippi River is evidence of violation of law, at least on the part of the shipper.

STATES (DOTTED) WHICH PROHIBIT EXPORT OF GAME.

For details, see pages 60-65.

Among game birds the most general prohibition is that against the export of quail, which is now in force in every State and Territory with six exceptions. Among the excepted States are Montana, North Dakota, and Wyoming, in which quail are scarce, and in Montana the sale and in North Dakota the killing of these birds are at present unlawful. Nearly every State in which prairie chickens occur now has a non-export law. The effect of this law, combined with the sale restrictions, as already stated, is to make the sale of prairie chickens illegal outside of their normal range.

Special attention is called to the following table, which contains a list of the game prohibited from export by each State:

The ports of export are Halifax and Yarmouth, Nova Scotia; Macadam Junction, New Brunswick; Quebec, Montreal, and Ottawa, Quebec; Kingston, Niagara Falls, Fort Erie, Windsor, Sault Ste. Marie, and Port Arthur, Ontario; and such others as the Minister of Customs may from time to time designate. (See pp. 137–138.)

GAME FOR PROPAGATION.

The subject of transportation of game for breeding purposes is one that has received too little attention at the hands of lawmakers. In some States the prohibition against export is so broad as to include not only dead game, but also live animals and birds intended for propagation. Legislation aimed directly at the sale of live game for such purposes is found in at least one State, Montana, which declares that any person who shall willfully catch, trap, or otherwise restrain for the purpose of sale, or domestication, or any other purpose, any buffalo, elk, moose, or mountain sheep shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Maine has recently inaugurated a departure in requiring every person who imports any game to first secure a permit from the commission of inland fisheries and game, under penalty of a fine of $50 to $500. Delaware, Nevada, North Carolina, and Tennessee have stringent laws prohibiting the export of quail, dead or alive, out of the State.

One of the objects of the Lacey Act is "to aid in the restoration of such [game] birds in those parts of the United States adapted thereto where the same have become scarce or extinct," and to that end the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized "to purchase such game birds and other wild birds as may be required therefor, subject, however, to the laws of the various States and Territories." Laws prohibiting the export of live birds from the State tend to interfere seriously with the accomplishment of this purpose. It would seem that a free interchange of game birds for restocking depleted covers should be a matter of mutual interest to all States that desire to restore the former abundance of game.

Canadian laws are less restrictive. The Dominion places no restriction on the exportation of live game, and several of the Provinces authorize the proper authorities to issue licenses for shipment of game intended for breeding purposes. A few States have adopted this principle, and some others make exceptions in nonexport laws, or permit the possession at any time of game intended for propagation. These exceptions are shown in the following list:

EXCEPTIONS TO NONEXPORT AND OTHER LAWS IN FAVOR OF GAME FOR PROPAGATION.

Arizona.—Possession of game birds for propagation permitted during close season. Fish and game commissioners authorized to take eggs of game birds for hatching. (Acts of 1901, No. 57, secs. 2, 18.)

Game for propagation may be imported from any other State or Territory, and the commissioner shall issue certificate therefor without charge.

The commissioner may, upon being satisfied that the possession or transportation of game is not in violation of the spirit of the law, grant a permit therefor. (Laws of 1899, ch. 98, pp. 196, 204, 207.)

Illinois.—Lawful to export any squirrels or game birds captured within the State, under a license from the State of Illinois. (Laws of 1899, p. 224, sec. 2.)

Texas.—Exception in case of live Mongolian or English pheasants shipped for scientific or breeding purposes. (Gen. Laws of 1897, ch. 149, sec. 7.)

Utah.—Exception in case of quail taken for propagation, in Kane and Washington counties. (Laws of 1899, ch. 26, sec. 26.)

II. ABSTRACTS OF LAWS WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO SHIPMENT AND SALE.

FEDERAL LAWS.

Federal game laws consist of statutes regulating interstate commerce in game, the importation of game from foreign countries, and provisions for the protection of game on territory under the jurisdiction of the United States. They comprise (1) the Lacey Act, regulating the importation of game and its shipment from one State to another; (2) tariff regulations governing animals and birds imported from abroad; (3) game laws of the District of Columbia, Alaska, and the Indian Territory; (4) provisions for protecting game in the national parks,¹ forest reserves, and other Government reservations. These acts of Congress are supplemented by regulations issued by the Secretaries of the Treasury, War, Interior, and Agriculture, relating chiefly to the protection of Government reservations and the details of importing foreign animals and birds.²

The territory protected by Federal statutes comprises more than 20 percent of the total area of the United States, and, besides the District of Columbia, the Indian Territory, and Alaska, is made up of reservations and parks ranging in size from a few acres to the great areas covered by the Indian reservations in Montana and South Dakota, which occupy a large part of those States. This vast domain is very unevenly protected. The District of Columbia, with an area of about 70 square miles, has a fairly complete and satisfactory game law, and, with the exception of Alexandria County, Va., is the smallest area in the United States protected by a special game statute. The Yellowstone National Park, with an area of 3,578 square miles, has also a comprehensive law, passed in 1894; and, like the Sequoia, Yosemite, and General Grant parks, in California, is guarded by United States troops. The Indian Territory, 31,400 square miles in extent, almost as large as the State of Maine, and one of the best regions in the Southwest for small game, is protected only by a provision prohibiting persons other than Indians from destroying game, except for food, in the Indian country.¹ The forest reserves, aggregating 46,766,529 acres, or about 73,000 square miles, an area nearly equal to that of New England and New York combined, are subject to regulations of the Secretary of the Interior, who is authorized by Congress to "make provisions for protection against destruction by fire and depredations upon public forests and forest reservations." There is further protection, however, in the provision of Congress that offenses concerning which the Federal laws are silent, when committed on Government reservations, shall receive the same punishment as that prescribed for like offenses by the laws of the State in which such reservations are situated. The great Territory of Alaska, embracing 570,000 square miles (more than twice the total area of Texas) is at present practically without protection, having but the nucleus of a game law in a provision prohibiting the export of eggs of cranes, ducks, and geese.

¹The national parks, now 12 in number, have all been established during the last thirty years. They may be grouped as follows: Five parks proper—Yellowstone, Wyo., 1872, 2,142,720 acres; Yosemite, Cal., 1890, 967,680 acres; Sequoia, Cal., 1890, 160,000 acres; General Grant, Cal., 1890, 2,560 acres; Mount Rainier, Wash., 1899, 207,360 acres: five military parks—Chickamauga, Ga., 1890, 6,195 acres; Shiloh, Tenn., 1894, 3,000 acres; Vicksburg, Miss., 1899, 1,233 acres; Gettysburg, Pa., 1895, 877 acres; Antietam, Md., 1890, 43 acres: the Hot Springs Reserve, Ark., 1880, 912 acres, and the Casa Grande Ruins, Ariz., 1892, part of 480 acres. The first five only are of special interest from the standpoint of game protection.

²The regulations of the Department of Agriculture may be found in Circular 29 of the Biological Survey, entitled 'Protection and importation of birds under act of Congress approved May 25, 1900,' and Circular 30, entitled 'Wild animals and birds which may be imported without permits.'

As a rule Federal laws are less subject to change than State laws. The game law of the District of Columbia passed in 1878, remained in force for twenty-one years; that of the Indian Territory enacted nearly seventy years ago (in 1832) is still on the statute books, and is now the oldest game law in force in the United States. These laws are scattered through the Revised Statutes and the Statutes at Large, often in very obscure places, and are easily overlooked. For example, the prohibition against importing eggs of game birds is contained in the free list of the tariff act of 1897; that conferring authority on the Secretary of the Interior to make regulations for the forest reserves, in the sundry civil bill for 1897, and that providing for the enforcement of State laws by Federal authority on Government reservations, in an act to protect harbor defenses, passed in 1898. In the absence of any complete compilation of the Federal provisions concerning game, it has been deemed advisable to bring them together in the present publication for greater convenience of reference.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall from time to time collect and publish useful information as to the propagation, uses, and preservation of such birds.

And the Secretary of Agriculture shall make and publish all needful rules and regulations for carrying out the purposes of this Act, and shall expend for said purposes such sums as Congress may appropriate therefor.

SEC. 4. That all packages containing such dead animals, birds, or parts thereof, when shipped by interstate commerce, as provided in section one of this Act, shall be plainly and clearly marked, so that the name and address of the shipper and the nature of the contents may be readily ascertained on inspection of the outside of such packages. For each evasion or violation of this Act the shipper shall, upon conviction, pay a fine of not exceeding two hundred dollars; and the consignee knowingly receiving such articles so shipped and transported in violation of this Act shall, upon conviction, pay a fine of not exceeding two hundred dollars; and the carrier knowingly carrying or transporting the same shall, upon conviction, pay a fine of not exceeding two hundred dollars.

SEC. 5. That all dead bodies, or parts thereof, of any foreign game animals, or game or song birds, the importation of which is prohibited, or the dead bodies, or parts thereof, of any wild game animals, or game or song birds transported into any State or Territory, or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein, shall upon arrival in such State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such animals and birds had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise. This Act shall not prevent the importation, transportation, or sale of birds or bird plumage manufactured from the feathers of barnyard fowl.

STATE LAWS.

The following digest of the laws of the various States relates chiefly to the transportation and sale of game. Sections which contain prohibitions against transportation and sale merely during close seasons are omitted, since they are so common that their repetition seems unnecessary. Hence no extracts will be found from the laws of Kentucky, or Louisiana, and the only section quoted from the laws of Mississippi is one defining game. Definitions of game are quoted also from the statutes of other States which contain such definitions, and a few other sections have been inserted when necessary for the sake of clearness; but as far as possible the extracts have been restricted to those treating of the trade in game. As a rule the statutes are quoted verbatim, but in some cases abstracts only are given, which are placed in brackets.

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

CLOSE SEASONS FOR GAME IN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA, 1901

[Compiled by T. S. Palmer and H. W. Olds.]

The following table shows the close seasons for all game in the United States and Canada, with the exception of mountain sheep, mountain goat, and a few unimportant species. The first date of the close season and the first date of the open season are given, so that open seasons may be found by reversing the dates. The term rabbit includes 'hare' of the Canadian laws; quail, the bird known as 'partridge' in the South; grouse, includes Canada grouse, sharp-tailed grouse, ruffed grouse (known as 'partridge' in the North and 'pheasant' in the South), and all members of the family except prairie chickens, ptarmigan, and sage hens. Introduced pheasant is restricted to the Old World pheasants; and geese includes 'brant.'

States are arranged geographically and grouped according to the Hallock Code. The general State laws have been followed in Maryland, North Carolina, and Virginia; but many county laws prevail in these States and in Tennessee.

[Compiled in part from Game Laws in Brief and corrected to August 1, 1901.]

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

CLOSE SEASONS FOR GAME IN MARYLAND, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, VIRGINIA, AND NORTH CAROLINA, 1901

Compiled by T. S. Palmer and H. W. Olds.]

The following table shows the close seasons for the more important game in each county of Maryland, Virginia, and North Carolina. It is designed to bring together in convenient form the numerous local seasons that prevail in these States, but in order to avoid making it too large, unimportant species and those not protected by the general game laws have been necessarily omitted. In its preparation much help has been derived from the Synopsis of the Game Laws of North Carolina, published by the State Board of Agriculture, while the laws of Maryland have been compiled directly from the abstract prepared by the State Game Warden and the Game and Fish Protective Association of Maryland.

The first date of the close season and the first date of the open season are given, so that open seasons may be readily found by reversing the dates. Thus, if the close season is Dec. 1-Sept. 1, the open season will be Sept. 1-Dec. 1.
