FEW flowers have attained so great a popularity in such a short time as the modern gladiolus. This is due to the marvelous strides which have been made in the improvement of this flower.

Wonderful spikes may now be had of large flowers in nearly every color. Flower lovers have also learned that it gives splendid results with even very little care, that it will last a week after being cut, and that it is one of the best flowers for the sick room because it has no odor.

In spite of the great demand for the gladiolus it is still surprisingly cheap in price.

While it is very easy to grow and will stand neglect, the observance of the following simple cultural directions will insure greater success:

Plant in full exposure to the sun in any well enriched garden soil, avoiding direct contact with manure. Plant any time from April 15th to May 15th or even June 1st. You will have bloom in about ninety days from planting. Plant about four inches deep and about four inches apart. In order to secure a longer period of bloom, plant about eight inches apart and then plant in between when those first planted have come through the ground.

After the first frost dig them up and cut off the tops close to the bulb. After they have dried remove the roots and the old bulb and store in a dry frost-proof place.

PEONIES.

Monsieur Dupont

The peony is fast becoming the queen of flowers and rivals the rose in this respect. In mere gorgeousness it easily surpasses the rose and its only drawback is its comparatively short season of bloom. This can be overcome to a large extent by selecting early, midseason and late varieties, also by planting in both sunny and semi-shaded locations. The peony is an ideal flower for the Northwest, as it is perfectly hardy without coddling.

We advise September planting.
