ONE-EYE DIVISIONS

All Peonies priced at Two Dollars and higher will be supplied in "One-Eye" divisions at half list price.

Single and Japanese

The single and Japanese varieties are of upright habit of growth and being of lighter weight and such form as not to retain water, are not beaten down by storms. This fact with their massing habit of bloom and effectiveness of the flower in shape and color makes them unsurpassed for landscape use.

To those who prefer the simple and unassuming, the single varieties make a very strong appeal. Those who seek the unusual will find the Japanese type of special interest and value. They give variety to a collection of peonies and the garden in general and while novel and unique are in no respect freakish.

Propagation is very slow and is far exceeded by the demand. While we have a very comprehensive planting of these types, we must protect propagation stock, and other than those who order early will probably be disappointed.

THE IRIS

Flag Lily — Fleur-de-Lis

The iris is botanically divided into two general classes:

1. Those varieties having rhizomes or root stocks.

2. Those varieties having a bulbous root.

Both of these general classes have several sub-divisions. We grow only those of the first class and but two of its sub-classes.

Pogoniris — Those varieties characterized by a distinct beard down the center of each fall, commonly called “bearded irises” and incorrectly also termed “German” iris.

Apagon.—Those varieties having smooth or beardless falls, known as “beardless irises.” The Japanese, Siberian and Pseudo-acorus varieties are of this group.

The bearded irises are those most generally grown, and consequently the best known. This group contains a vast number of varieties. Of necessity, many must be inferior and but comparatively few really distinctive varieties. It is our desire to eliminate and restrict our list rather than to work toward volume. The past season, we have discarded many varieties which are in general cultivation and which will doubtless be “conspicuous by their absence,” having apparently become fixtures in the list of the average nurseryman. On the other hand, our list contains many varieties which we doubt if you will find listed in any other price list, being recent French, English and American introductions.

Tall Bearded Irises

Pagoniris

Varieties are described in a manner similar to that used for the peony:

1—Name of variety.

2—Rating of the variety as to desirability being the average vote of a jury composed of twenty-three members of the American Iris Society as published in Bulletin 5 of the Society under date of May, 1922.

Rating was made on basis of 10 being perfection not yet attained.

9.7 or 9.8 highest perfection in cultivation.

9.5 almost perfection.

9.0 very fine.

8.5 fine.

8.0 very good.

7.0 good.

6.0 good but not important.

5.0 fair but discarded because similar varieties are superior.

3—Name of hybridizer or introducer.

4—Date of commercial introduction.

We consider this symposium as being a very important step forward in the future of the iris. While not above just criticism, it is in general correct, conservative and a reliable guide.

Pogoniris require a well drained soil. Water standing over the roots for any considerable length of time will cause rot. Very rich soil is neither necessary nor desirable and fresh manure in direct contact with the roots is very injurious. Bone meal is a safe fertilizer to use and in the limited quantity required, quite economical and convenient to handle. Pulverized limestone is very beneficial and can be used in liberal quantity. While the iris will survive under greater neglect and abuse than any other plant of which we know, it appreciates good treatment, and cultivation is necessary for the plants to produce their flowers in profusion and perfection.

The roots appear to enjoy, in fact, require for best results, not only a well drained soil but a warm, open location. For this reason, we do not advise interplanting with other plants or ground covers as the surface creeping rhizomes do best on direct exposure to the sun. We advise planting in August and September, though as in the case of the peony, planting may be done until freezing of the ground prevents. Planting may also be done in early July after flowering, provided the roots are not permitted to dry out.

The bearded irises are usually catalogued according to the six species below. While we give these sub-classifications for reference and such interest as they may be to our customers, we do not so group in listing the varieties.

Amoena — Standards, white. Falls, various colors. Example: Wyomissing.

Neglecta—Standards, lavender to purple. Falls of a darker shade, sometimes marked with white. Example: Blue Jay and Perfection.

Pallida — Standards and falls same shade of blue, lavender or purple. Strong growing plant with fine foliage. Example: Lohengrin.

Plicata—Frilled margin, suffused, edged or splashed various colors on a white ground. Example: Mme. Chereau.

Squalens—Standards, copper or bronze in clouded shades. Falls of various colors. Example: Prosper Laugier.

Variegata—Standards, various shades of yellow. Falls of various colors or combinations. Example: Mrs. Neubronner and Iris King.

We cater to that rapidly increasing number of flower lovers who have reached the conclusion that a choice variety takes no more space, fertilizer or care than a mediocre one and that the increased pleasure and satisfaction more than justifies the additional first cost. Have you thought of the situation from that viewpoint; that it is really your limited planting area and time which are important, rather than the first cost of the plant?

CLAIRE DUBOIS

A large, compact bloom of rose type.

Clear deep violet rose in color and of agreeable fragrance. Blooms in late mid-season on stems about 30 inches high. Its shipping and lasting qualities as a cut flower give it exceptional commercial value.

Introduction

WE offer, the present season, the following selected list of choice varieties of peonies and irises. Only such varieties as are listed herein are offered this season. To such of our customers as desire, we are pleased to send our list of 1921 which contains descriptions of most of the varieties. It has been our custom, in previous years, to list the new varieties which we were testing, but of which we did not have sufficient stock to permit sale. We have imported every available new variety of peony and iris produced by the English and French hybridizers, and such as have survived our climate, are now growing. However, the list has become so very extensive that we shall no longer continue to include these varieties in our list for a matter of mere record.

We have not only added the new, improved varieties of both American and European hybridizers but discarded many of the older varieties which have been surpassed by recent introductions. Thus, as in previous seasons, we have added on at the top and cut off at the bottom, improving and condensing our list. It is a list of the choice and desirable, of interest and value to the modern garden lover, rather than partaking of the features of the obituary column on the one hand and a horticultural encyclopedia on the other. To those who desire a complete list of all varieties of peonies and irises we are pleased to refer to Bulletin 14 of the American Peony Society, and Bulletin 5 of the American Iris Society, which are not only complete but authentic in this respect.

“We know of no grower with a standard as high who issues a list as comprehensive.”

TERMS—Cash with order, by post office, express money order or bank draft on Chicago or New York, at par.

PRICES—This list supersedes all prior quotations and stock is offered subject to prior sale of surplus.

Due to the high cost of labor, packing materials, etc., and the fact that we do not (as is quite customary) add to cover cost of same, we cannot accept orders for a total amount under three dollars.

THE PEONY

Varieties are described in accord with the publications of the American Peony Society as follows:

- 1—Name of the variety.
- 2—Rating as to desirability being the average vote of the members of the society and published in Bulletin 14, under date of May, 1921. A vote of ten was established as perfection and of five or under as not being worth growing. We list very few varieties rated under eight.
- 3—Name of hybridizer or introducer.
- 4—Date of commercial introduction.

Prices given are for divisions of standard size. It is this size which we recommend. However, when it is desired to obtain a greater selection of varieties for a given expenditure and it is borne in mind that for the lessened cash investment an investment in time is substituted, we offer this season, in response to a popular demand, "one eye" divisions. With a knowledge of the circumstances as above outlined and some special attention they will be found quite satisfactory. They should only be purchased by those who have had some previous experience with the peony, and then only in the rarer varieties; as the additional time required to reach maturity and bloom in full luxury is not justified in case of the standard or lower priced sorts. All varieties priced at two dollars and over will be supplied in "one eye" divisions at half of the prices listed. For example: a variety priced at $10 which price is for a standard division will be supplied in a "one eye" division for five dollars.

There are eight types, shapes or formations of the peony:

Single—Albiflora.

Japanese—Mikado.

Semi-double—Marie Jacquin.

Anemone—Philomele.

Crown—Octavie Demay.

Bomb—Felix Crousse.

Semi-rose—Mons. Martin Cahuzac.

Rose—Festiva Maxima.

Aside from yellow and while we have some varieties approaching yellow, it is still one of the new things in store for us: there are four general shades or colors:

White—Festiva Maxima.

Pale or Flesh Pink—Octavie Demay.

Dark Pink—Mons. Jules Elie.

Red—Felix Crousse.

In addition to the above, varieties should be selected to cover the full blooming season in the various colors; early, mid-season and late. As to these matters, we are always pleased to enter into correspondence, make suggestions, etc.
