Had I My Choice

By Elsie V. H. Baldwin

AD I my choice, these are the things I'd ask:
A little leisure for a well-loved task;
A quiet hill, where Space unfolds her wings and winds are fresh and breathe of far-off things,
Where Winter snows fall crisply on the sod,

White and unspoiled just as they come from God,
Where Summer heat descends with Life, not Death,
Because untainted by the city's breath;
A little house, where friends may come and sit;
An open gate whereon this motto's writ:

"Good friend, behold beneath these trees
A Gate that loves a Guest;
Here he who walks may wait at ease
And he who runs may rest!"

Go to the city, watch the faces gaunt;
Is this so great a thing for man to want?

L. J. Germann

Foreword

PEONIES

We have withdrawn from our list and discarded many varieties that have been found inferior to the newer introductions. We believe that we have one of the best collections of rare and choice Peonies to be found in the world. It embraces the latest and best of such wonderful hybridizers as the late Victor Lemoine, of Nancy, and of A. Dessert, of Chenonceaux, France, as well as the most noteworthy productions of the older French growers, such as Verdier, Guerin, Mechin, Calot, and Crousse. It includes the best of the introductions from Kelway & Son, of England, as well as selections from all the noted growers of this country, such as Richardson, Hollis, Terry, Rosenfield, Pleas, Shaylor, Thurlow and Brand.

Planting. Peonies like a well-drained, deeply dug soil. The root should be set so that the topmost eye or bud is about 2 to 3 inches below the surface of the soil. They should be planted about 2 to 3 feet apart; the latter distance is preferable if room can be spared. They never should be planted in soil in which Peonies have grown before. When the ground is very fertile, it is best to use no manure.

Under no circumstances must manure be allowed to come in contact with the roots. The season for planting is after September 1 and before the ground freezes. We will dig and ship Peonies only during that season.

Cultivating. Frequent cultivation of the soil in the spring will promote strong growth and produce large blooms. Occasional cultivation after blooming is beneficial to the plants in every way. An application of bone meal in the fall and of sheep manure in the spring will increase the size and quality of the blooms.

Size of Roots. Prices quoted are for one-year-old plants or strong divisions, except as to new and scarce varieties where stock is very limited. Orders for these varieties will be accepted only with the understanding that the roots delivered, although of good growing size, will be divided to a point which will not permit of further proper division. Except in the hands of experts, they are liable to cause great disappointment. As a rule, even when successfully grown, it takes several years before they make sizable, satisfactory plants.

Remember. Too deep planting will cause shy blooming. When cutting flowers, especially from young plants, do not cut too close to the ground but leave as much foliage as possible, because the leaves are necessary for root-growth.

Peonies, when transplanted, do not fully recover and produce typical blooms until the second or third year.

We have listed the new and rare varieties which include the best productions of this country and Europe. The stock of many varieties is very limited and on some we have placed no price, indicating the scarcity. We shall be glad to advise you by special correspondence of the quantity of these we can furnish.

My Visit to Mrs. Pleas' Garden

(Extract from the Garden Magazine)

Prof. Saunders' article, "What America Has Done for the Peony," in the September issue of the Garden Magazine makes timely this long-cherished recollection of mine, my meeting a number of years ago with Mrs. Pleas, now one of the national figures in the Peony world.

It was Sunday, June 4, 1909, "Peony Sunday," that I made my trip to Spiceland, Indiana.

The quaint old brick house, set down among its gardens, was girt about with magnificent Colorado Blue Spruce, the finest trees of the kind I have ever been privileged to see. They bordered lawn and gardens, and out beyond them stretched fields of gleaming bloom—a sight I will never forget! Fortunate in having Mrs. Pleas as my guide I went through this colorful fairyland of her creating. The single Peonies just in their prime, were a most interesting spectacle.

Mrs. Pleas herself was all that the ardent Peony lover imagines her to be; she has spent much of her lifetime in an effort to increase the world's sum of beauty; her achievement speaks for her in no uncertain terms. Even the names of her Peonies carry something of her special charm, suggesting as they do a nature delightfully imaginative and sensitive to color—Wild Rose, Opal Iris, Rosy Dawn, Golden Wedding, Altar Candles, Cottage Maid, Quaker Lady, Midsummer's Night Dream, the world famous Jubilee, are surely more than mere labels!

I saw them all growing that "Peony Sunday" of 1909, and the careful observer has no difficulty in guessing the significance of each thoughtfully given name. When we came to Quaker Lady, Mrs. Pleas told me that the beautiful, delicate flower was her mother's namesake.

My own garden is a perennial reminder of that red-letter morning spent with Mrs. Pleas, for in it grow more than five hundred varieties of Peony, of which not a few originated in the gardens of Spice-land.

20,000 BLOOMS COMPETE FOR PRIZES IN ANNUAL PEONY SHOW

"Jubilee," Queen of Peonies, Is Back-yard Garden Product

Ancestors of Magnificent Bloom in Horticultural Hall Exhibit Discovered by Woman

Among the 20,000 flowers placed on exhibition yesterday at the annual show of the American Peony Society, in Horticultural Hall, Broad street below

Locust, is a single bloom which stood out to exemplify the romance in floriculture.

The flower is a splendid specimen of the peony "Jubilee," shown in the east for the first time and without a doubt, the headliner of the exhibit. It is snow white, fully ten inches in diameter, and experts yesterday ranked it above the celebrated "Le Cygne," which created so much comment in the national shows during the last year or two.

FINE FLOWERS

Hundreds of Visitors from at Home and Abroad Visit Van Wert Gardens

It is peony time in Van Wert and hundreds of out-of-town people joined with the local lovers of flowers in visiting the gorgeous gardens Sunday and Monday. Despite the freezing weather of the early spring and the consequent dark outlook for the peonies, never were the Van Wert gardens so lovely in the colorful profusion of their blooms. Peonies of every shape and color, the finest produced on mother earth, all aristocrats in their kingdom, were enjoyed as much by those who did not know their names and history as by the flower fancier. Mr. Germann's "Wahnfried Gardens," possibly the oldest and best known of peony gardens, was one of the most attractive, with its arrangements of not only the garden beautiful, but a large field of blooms which gave the massed effect, and demonstrated the decorative possibility of the flower.
