This tree we find growing on top of the Buttes in the Bad Lands of western North Dakota, also in the western part of our State, it is a wonderful tree being able to grow in places that are exposed so severely, in fact the most severe locations do not seem to discourage them at all as they smile and thrive there. There is no location in our state that any thing will grow, but what these pines will do well, and just think what a windbreak of them would mean around your yard these winter days. The more we have studied this tree the more convinced we are it is the ideal windbreak tree for the plains.

Unless properly handled in the nursery and as grown down east it is hard to transplant. The trees that are collected in their native habitat are almost valueless on account of their root system. The trees we are offering have been twice transplanted and twice root pruned, and the root system is trained into a ball shaped mass directly under the tree so that they will come with the tree, when we dig them and not be left in the ground which is generally the case with these. Another thing that must be taken into consideration is the way in which they are dug as this variety will not stand any pulling as the bark peels off the roots very easily, but to overcome this we run our digger under them first to cut the roots and then use a spade to lift them so we are certain that they will come up in A No. 1 shape.

We have priced these trees so that the price alone should sell them without taking quality into consideration at all, and when you get quality thrown in for good measure we do not see how you can pass this bargain up if you ever figure on planting a windbreak. The above price is good only until April 1st so you better get your order in at once.
