How to Grow Gladioli

SOIL Any good garden soil will answer. It is best to spade or plow in the fall after covering the ground with well rotted cow manure and leave the ground in a rough condition over winter. In the spring, the ground should be plowed or spaded ten to twelve inches deep and well pulverized. Do not use any fresh straw manure in the spring of the year.

PLANTING In the Spring after all danger of frost is over and the soil is in good condition, plant the bulbs in rows $1\frac{1}{2}$ to 4 feet apart depending on the method of cultivation. Dig a trench four inches deep and plant about four inches apart. After covering the bulbs, should you find that the soil is not rich enough, put on a top dressing of bone meal or pulverized sheep manure.

CULTIVATING Cultivation can be started soon after planting. Care should be taken not to break off the young shoots as they appear, but cultivate often keeping the soil loose and free from weeds. Do not work the ground when too wet. When flower spikes begin to show, cultivate one to two inches deep to avoid injuring the tender feeding roots.

WATERING Do not water until the plants are about six inches above the ground. After that give them plenty of water until they begin to bloom. Even after they have flowered, they should have as heavy a watering for at least a month.

CUTTING Caution: Leave three or four leaves to insure bulb growth. It weakens the bulb to cut stem too low. When the first flower is open cut the spike by punching the point of a knife sideways into the stem and then crack the stem over. Put spike in fresh water. Each morning remove wilted blossoms, cut off a little of the stem (cut on a slope) and give fresh water. In this way all the flowers will open and a spike will last a week or longer in the house.

DIGGING Bulbs should be dug before the plants are too ripe and before hard frosts. Dig the bulbs and cut off the tops about one-half inch from the bulb. Dry well in the air and sunshine, then put in a dry airy place for two or three weeks to cure. Be sure to protect from frost. As soon as well dried the old bulb, bulblets and roots can easily be removed.

STORAGE Put bulbs in trays not over four inches deep. Store in cellar or basement where the temperature is uniform and around 40 to 45 degrees. Small quantities and bulblets may be kept in paper bags. Bulbs should not be kept air tight.
