Souvenir de Claudius Pernet

The most successful rose growers plant in the Autumn——there's a reason!

IT IS an accepted truth among the most successful amateur and professional Rose growers in America, that bushes carefully and properly planted in the Autumn produce earlier, larger and longer stemmed blooms the following year than Spring-planted stock. Any time from late October up to the end of November is most favorable.

The later the planting can be deferred, the better, so long as comparatively mild weather prevails for planting. For late planting mulch the ground to prevent it from freezing before Roses are received.

The Roses we ship in the Autumn are lifted straight out of the open field, carefully packed and shipped, or delivered to your grounds immediately. Such methods eliminate all loss of vitality or drying out such as must occur, in varying degree, to stock that is lifted in the Fall and stored all Winter for early Spring shipments.

The bushes are in the very best of condition and burst into growth with the first warmth of Spring, long before Spring-planted stock has even taken hold in the ground, and it is the early start that enables the bushes to develop long, vigorous stems before mid-Summer heat sets in. If you wish your new Roses to be in flower in June, YOU MUST PLANT IN THE FALL.
