GENERAL NOTES

Occasionally we hear of a failure in the flowering results in Gladioli. There must be a reason, and more often it is on account of shallow planting on outside stock. Have your rows at least 2 feet apart to allow the sunlight to penetrate. Select a good piece of land, not a gravel heap or a small marsh. Plant your bulbs 5 or 6 inches deep, throwing back about three inches of soil. As soon as they break through the ground, give them a top dressing of sheep manure and then about two to three inches more soil. Deep planting with proper fertilization will give you stronger spikes, straight stems and sufficient moisture. Try Cogger's way this year as an experiment. As your success in producing good blooms means recommendation for my bulbs, where failure, many times, means a dissatisfied customer.

Yours for better Glads,
