Krider's Northern Grown Roses

Plant Roses This Fall!

Rose bushes planted this Fall will become well established before Winter sets in; and next year will see them better developed and bearing a greater abundance of well formed blooms than those plants set out next Spring.

This advantage is accompanied with very little risk providing the following simple directions are followed. In Fall, just before cold weather sets in and frost enters the ground, mound the soil around the branches of the plant at least ten inches high and cover with a little straw or some other loose litter. This will prevent the wind and sun from drying the branches during the Winter.
