These interesting vines were first brought to the United States about the year 1870. They came from China, that far-away land of wonder and mystery, but where the Chinese first found them is not known. The name "cinnamon," was given to them on account of the odor of the bloom, which is similar to that of cinnamon. The fragrance is remarkable and too delightful to describe. They are covered with pretty, heart-shaped, glossy leaves that turn to a golden yellow in the fall. The wealth of tiny white bloom with exquisite perfume adds a charm unknown to all other climbers. The tubers are hardy and grow larger from year to year. The tops die down every fall but grow again very rapidly in the spring. If given support they climb thirty or forty feet, branching profusely, often growing 10 inches or more in a day.

The vines are the hardiest, surest growers, even under adverse conditions, of anything I have ever noted. One strong factor in their favor is that cinnamon vines have no insect enemies whatever. In my many years' experience, growing millions of them, I never saw a decayed tuber or any blight or disease of any sort among them.

The tubers grow straight down the big end at the bottom, and in rich soil often attain a length of twenty inches or more the first season. In old vines of five or ten years the tubers attain enormous proportions.

A curious fact about the tubers, and one not generally known, is that new ones are formed every year from the old tubers, the old being absorbed in the new and larger growth. They are unquestionably the most beautiful and attractive of all climbers. They are selling today faster than ever before. Only the highest merit can account for their ever-increasing popularity.

MADEIRA VINES

(Boussingaultia)

A fine perennial climber with thick, waxy, green, heart-shaped leaves set quite close together making them desirable for medium shade. They grow from 10 to 15 feet high, producing during early fall racemes of small white fragrant flowers on attractive small spikes, grown from tubers like potatoes which should be taken up and kept in the cellar over winter. Very easily grown and will thrive in any location or soil.

One of the best vines for planting thickly along the front edge of a porch or window for quick effect.

We have a limited quantity of these tubers which we are offering at the following prices:

Medium Size	$25.00 per 1,000
Medium Size	$2.75 per 100
Selected Clusters	$37.50 per 1,000
Selected Clusters	$4.00 per 100
