Foreign Plant Material

During the past few years we have been gathering seeds from every available source for experimental purposes, covering every section of the globe for material which would add both beauty and novelty to our perennial garden and rockery. It is our purpose to list only those which we have found, through experience, would be sufficiently hardy to enable them to withstand the climatic conditions of this country.

These plants will be listed in our general catalog as soon as we can determine their qualifications to a fitting place in our home garden.

BERWICK GARDENS

Planting Time

Questions are often asked as to the proper planting time.

This depends entirely upon the material to be planted.

Many rock plants do considerably better if planted in the fall. As the greater portion of these plants bloom in the spring and early summer, losses occur on account of lateness in spring planting which leaves an unsightly spot in the rockery or border. Weather conditions in the fall are usually more favorable. A little covering of dry, clean straw is an excellent material for winter protection.

Following are a few planting suggestions :

Alpine and Herbaceous Plants from September 1st to November. Roses from October 15th until December. Peonies, German and Japanese Iris, from September 15th until frost. Oriental Poppies from August 15th until October 15th. Dutch Bulbs from October 1st until ground is frozen. Lillies immediately upon receipt of shipment. It is always well to remember that the most suitable time for transplanting any hardy plant is during their dormant period, which usually occurs about the middle part of September, or immediately after the warmest and driest days of the summer are over. This material can be divided and transplanted just prior to making its new fall growth.

Light frosts in the early fall are no hindrance but rather helpful, and a continuation of your garden work is advised.

All plants listed in our Catalog are from three-inch pots. Prices on Field Grown Clumps will be given upon request.
