REFERENCES. First National Bank of Ithaca and our past record.

Foreword

CATALOGUE. In keeping with current hard times we are reducing catalogue costs and are passing the saving along to our patrons in lowered prices.

COLLECTIONS. None are offered as the catalogue prices are about as low as the usual collection prices.

ROYAL IRIS GARDENS. Our son, J. C. Nicholls, Jr., has opened an Iris business of his own under the name: Royal Iris Gardens, Camillus, N. Y. His reliability and correct ethics may be counted upon. His Cornell training and years of experience in growing and shipping fine plants warrant our confident hope for his success.

SEEDLINGS

PEONIES. Some doubles and Japanese of high quality are under propagation and will be offered soon.

IRISES. Careful study, hard work and luck are giving us some nice Iris seedlings; the further we go and the more careful we are in keeping records and in studying heredities, the plainer it becomes that pure chance is a very nice adjunct. Till the whole field shall have been explored this ought to cause no surprise; all Mendelism is based on the law of the probability of chance, the one unchangeable law of the Universe, and all anyone can do is to allow chance to operate in his favor, following up leads that come among the seedlings. Our introductions have been made conservatively and are probably worthy.

CHANGE IN POLICY

To permit concentration on the breeding of Bearded Iris, we expect to dispose of practically everything in our gardens except the Iris and Peony seedlings, a limited list of the very best Bearded Irises and the Louisiana beardless Irises. Before the year is out all low-priced Irises, named Peonies and the various Iris species are to be removed. This offers an opportunity to obtain many things at bargain prices.

INTRODUCTIONS FOR 1932

AUREX (Nich. 1932) 36" Ambassador X Fire God. S clear, carrying yellow of medium tone, nicely domed. F blackish purple per Ridgeway, red in effect; Narrow buff edge. Very velvety. Beard yellow. Of Ambassador size but has wider falls and is much better branched. Grape fragrance.

NATIVE AMERICAN BEARDLESS IRISES

Three years of collecting, growing and studying the Native Southern Irises shows them to be hardy here and certainly removes any question as to their beauty and value as garden subjects. They grow best if about three inches of peat moss or leaf mold be worked into the soil and better bloom will result from mulching lightly; three inches of peat moss immediately around the shoots has proven best and it should not be removed too early in spring. They like food and should not be allowed to exhaust the fertility of the ground. For all Irises and Peonies we find 1000 pounds of 5-10-5 per acre in late summer and 300 pounds of Sodium Nitrate per acre in spring answer the purpose well. Work into the soil. An acre contains 43,560 sq. ft. or 4,840 sq. yds. The Irises spread, plant three feet apart.

In discovering and classifying these Irises, Dr. Small and Mr. Alexander have made one of the greatest contributions to Floriculture in a century and their work is far from done.

Over the ages Nature has done all the indiscriminate hybridizing that is advisable and has given us a wide diversification of color, size, height and form. Nevertheless, study reveals some enticing lines of breeding to be undertaken. Before offering any seedlings the hybridizer will have to be familiar with the existing forms or he will be quite apt to introduce types that are no better than or even quite inferior to existing wild ones already in captivity.

Our greatest reason for withholding distribution of these Irises until now is to have their identifications so absolutely accurate as to provide plants for the use of other Commercial Growers in checking the trueness of such as they may have. Unless something of this kind be done the situation is practically certain to become so confused that it will take years to approximately straighten it out. The confusion is already making headway, considerable.

Prices are based on quality and on available stocks. It has been our intention to use lower prices but it is a case of either these or further delay in offering at all. Of many of the very best we have only four or five rhizomes, and a number of those are not procurable from any other source; it should be quite apparent that advantage is not being taken of that monopoly.

The numbers are garden serials.
