WHAT IS HOME WITHOUT A GARDEN ?

A "FOOD GARDEN" ON EVERY FARM

Wartime gardening taught the people of the country how much could be saved by growing their own vegetables. An era of hard times and unemployment has brought back these lessons vividly and a revival of vegetable gardening.

Aside from the economy of growing vegetables from a small expenditure for seeds, you will have available for your table the highest quality vegetables, sun-ripened on your own plants and vines, gathered only a few minutes before cooking, and they are vastly more delicious and wholesome than the best you can buy.

WHY SHOULD 30c WORTH COST YOU A DOLLAR?

Of each dollar you pay at the market for vegetables only about 30 cents goes to the actual producer. The other 70 cents is taken up by transportation costs, distribution expenses, and middlemen's profits. With your own garden, there is no need for complicated and expensive machinery to bring vegetables to your table; no one but you takes a profit. A vegetable garden will cut your grocery bills in half; will give you healthy exercise and pleasant outdoor recreation; will furnish fresh vegetables for your family, and enable you to can and store vegetables for future use.

FRESH VEGETABLES ARE HEALTHFUL

Vegetables have more than a dollars and cents value. If one's diet is well varied with fresh vegetables at all seasons, there will be no need for spring tonics. Vegetables furnish those mysterious substances known as Vitamins. On the basis of health alone, vegetables should be grown by everyone who has even a small patch of ground. The average family can grow one-eighth of its food on the ordinary lot and save at least $100 a year. In the South, where it is possible to grow two or three crops on the same ground during the year, a larger saving can be accomplished.
