the end of the tail. Bill brown, with the under mandible paler at the base; mouth yellow; legs and toes brown with the under surface of the toes inclining to yellow; claws brown. Its manners, as far as I had an opportunity of observing them, were so like those of the golden-crested wren, that at first I mistook it for that species. It was continually in motion, flitting from place to place in search of insects on umbelliferous plants, and such other herbage as the bleak banks of the Northumberland coast affords: such a situation could not be at all suited to the habits of this species, and there can be little doubt that it had arrived at the coast previous to or immediately after its autumnal migrations.—J. HANCOCK, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Note.—When Mr. Gould's figure appeared in the 'Birds of Europe,' we expressed an opinion that this might only prove a young bird of some of the other species, and we rejoice that an opportunity has now occurred of clearing this doubt. Mr. Hancock has stated to Mr. Selby that the covering of the nostrils in his specimen consists of various feathers and not of a single plumulet as in the other Reguli: this will afford a distinguishing mark, and will moreover destroy the importance of the structure as a generic character. We would recommend, however, that the nestling or first plumage of the Regulus aurocapillus and ignicapillus should still be examined.—EDIT.
