---0--- all received to data except the orchids, 7 in number, sent to Williams for direct report.

These are, of course, merely sight identifications. I am pretty sure of the correctness of the identifications as far as made. Naturally intensive study should be deferred until more material becomes available.

I wonder how many more permutations and combinations the collector will originate? The "bis" numbers and the lettered numbers will make it very difficult to maintain a working number list, because one never knows how much "space" to leave in preliminary lists. Too bad, also, that they elected to start a new number series with the New Guinea material, duplicating the Philippine-Borneo-Indo-China series, for this will cause endless confusion in the future, just as in the past; for we still note Cuming numbers from Polynesia (his first collections) cited as Philippine. And if you ever used Henry numbers and Zollinger numbers where the lettering is worked overtime, you would have to be omnipotent to determine just what is meant by this or that addition! Ho hum. Koelz did it for one of his collections from northern India, sometimes running through the entire alphabet for a single number. I think that here the use of letters all indicated the same locality or perhaps merely the same habitat.

Note for Dr. Bartlett:

When you get to the end of this assemblage there will doubtless be a number of "singles". If these could be laid aside and sent to me I would be glad to go over them, check the tentative generic identifications, correct or add etc. and return all such "singles" to you. To avoid possibility of this proposed sending being mixed with our set, these "singles" better be handled as an independent transaction.

Memo for Dr. Bartlett:

Orchids go over to Williams who will report direct. He said that last lot was difficult and many could not be named to the species because of the nature of the material. We will have plenty of headaches, for Mrs. C. seems to be a past master of the art of not getting what one actually needs for classification purposes. So many of the specimens collected at just the wrong time, etc., to say nothing of how they are prepared. All this material now goes to the mounter and when we get the specimens into families then we can commence working out the puzzles. I wonder what will now happen to her with her source of funds (Manila) now cut off and the Nips. edging in on New Guinea !
