My dear Mr Deane

The day after my return home I was prostrated by an attack of influenza which emptied me out of all energy of both body & mind. I do not know when I have felt so good for nothing. After two days I was as completely done as if I had been sick of a fever for a month. I was compelled to give up everything and that too when there was so much that I wanted to do. It seemed cheerful not to respond to your kind letter which I found awaiting my arrival and which added so much to the pleasures of the time coming - and I have wanted to thank you for giving Anderson's A. N. Salies.

(which I have not yet looked over) for the separate pages of your Herbarium notes &c - There is so much left undone which I ought to have done! I am hoping to be stronger soon. But the misery of it is my friends will give no encouragement to any such expectations. This only as a kind of apology and explanation I am not sick - If I lie still and quiet I can imagine myself capable of doing almost anything but when it comes to the doing
- well I just have to give up Even then Bob
