These I have now indicated, and I conclude with again expressing a hope that local officers interested in the history of the province will come forward with information which may clear up all the doubtful points.

Baiswárí Folk Songs collected by Bábú JOGENDRA NÁTH RAE, Gházípur. (Contributed by W. IRVINE, Esq., C. S.)

[The following songs are composed in the Baiswárí dialect, with a slight admixture of Western Bhojpúrí. They were collected by Bábú J. N. Rae in the town of Gházípur. He says that he took them down, exactly as repeated, from the mouths of women of the lower castes, such as Kahárs, etc. Some songs were obtained from Gáthaks or male professional singers, who recited them, and whose words were taken down. The Bhartharí song was obtained from the dictation of a Gosain mendicant.—The text has been edited by Mr. G. A. Grierson, C. S., who has added a few notes, distinguished by his initials (G. A. G.). The translations have also been amended in several places, where they represented the original either incorrectly or too freely.—ED.]

NOTE. TITI, 'a little child', is generally used affectionately to mean 'a dear little child'. G. A. G.

Translation.

Birth-music is being sounded in the house of Nand.
At Mathurá Krish'n is born
And birth-music is sounded at Gokul.
To Queen Jasmat (Jasodá) a son is born.
All the attendant ladies sing songs of jubilee.
Birth-music is being sounded, etc.

The legend of the birth of S'rí Krish'n is so well-known that it requires no notes to describe how he was born at Mathurá and thence

* A ceremony held in honour of the goddess Chhath a month after the birth of a child. It is on this day that the mother leaves the room where she was confined for the period; she is thenceforth considered as pure and capable of performing all the household duties and mixing freely with the inmates of the house. [The ceremony was originally performed on the sixth day after birth, hence its name. G. A. G.]

 \dagger [Bháüj sister-in-law, i. e., brother's wife; but nanad sister-in-law, i. e., husband's sister. The idea of the piece is this: nanad goes to visit bháüj on the sixth day after the birth of the latter's son. Bháüj is sulky and says, "nanad has come to rob me of my child". Nanad remonstrates and says, she is come to make presents. There is a reference to the proverbial jealousy between sisters-in-law. Each is much displeased when the other has a child, but at the same time she is bound to give the mother handsome presents, in order that when her turn comes, she may get still handsomer ones.—ED.]

transported secretly to Gokul to the house of Nand, how this precaution was taken in order to save the child from falling into the hands of Kans, the wicked uncle and king of Mathurá, and how his real parents were confined in a black dingy den where the future hero was born.

Sohars are songs that are sung on the occasion of a birth. The women of the neighbourhood all muster together and make themselves jubilant over the interesting occasion. There is no end of dholaks (drums) being beaten with all the might of their bravery.

॥ ३॥ होली गीत।

१ पिचुकारिन काईँ केा मारि, लला हेा रङ्ग को चेट मोहि कारी लगत पिचुकारिन काईँ इत्यादि, २ भर पिचुकारी मेरे मुख पर मारी उँगिया भिजि तन सारी, लला हेा रङ्ग को चेट मोहि कारी लगत पिचुकारिन काईँ इत्यादि

NOTE. ant here = with, 'severe', of a wound &c. G. A. G.

Translation.

- Why dost thou spurt with a syringe? Ho Lalá! It strikes hard against me—the liquid red. Why dost thou spurt, etc.
- 2. The full syringe thou dost pour on my face— My entire bodice and body have got wet, Ho Lalá ! Why dost thou spurt, etc.

Holí songs are peculiar songs that are sung on the occasion of the celebrated festival known as the Holí which, as is well-known, is solemnized in honour of Krish'njí. [It is rather the festival in honour of the Uttaráyana or Vernal Equinox. G. A. G.]

॥ ४॥ चद्रती गीत।

१ चइत की चाननि रतियाँ र री निरखत भई भोर, मेारे रामा हो, चइत इत्यादि २ र री सइयाँ मेार चन्दा भइलेँ, र री मैँ तेा भइलेाँ चकेार मेारे रामा हो, चइत इत्यादि NOTE. \mathbf{v} t is an interjection only used in addressing females. The masculine form is \mathbf{v} t. The चकार, chakor, is the Greek partridge (Perdix rufa), which is said to be enamoured of the moon, and to exist on moonbeams and ambrosia. G. A. G.

Translation.

- Gazing at the moonlit night of (the month of) Chait, It has become well-nigh dawn; O my Rámá, gazing at the moonlit night, etc.
 Lo, my husband has become the moon,
- And lo, I have become the chakor. O my Rámá, gazing at the moonlit night, etc.

॥ ५ ॥ चइती गीत ।

Translation.

O my beloved, why dost thou forget me in the foreign land?

- Thou hadst gone and settled in Bindrában, And from time to time sendedst letters of jog from the foreign land. O my beloved, why dost thou forget me, etc.
- 2. But now thou hast gone and residest in Dwáriká, And makest love with the hunch-backed woman in the foreign land. O my beloved, why dost thou forget me, etc.

When Krish'njí left Rádhikájí he went over to Dwáriká and there assumed the title of a king; there he is said to have fallen in love with a certain hunch-backed woman known in Hindú mythology as Kubjá or Kubrí. There is a legend to this effect that by the touch of the divine hands of Krish'njí this ugly creature was transformed into a most beautiful woman of graceful form and figure. In this song Rádhiká alludes to this awkward intrigue of her lover and twits him with his faithlessness.*

॥ ७॥ कजरो गीत।

* ['Letters of jog' apparently means letters on the subject of practising asceticism. Mr. Grierson points out a parallel passage in a song of Súr Dás, in which that poet recounts a number of beneficent acts traditionally ascribed to Krish'n, such as his assistance to the Páṇḍavas, his protection of Draupadí, the destruction of Hiraṇyakaśipu, etc. Among them the poet adds : ápu jáï Dwáríká baiţhe likhi likhi jog paṭháź. The same statement also occurs in another of Súr Dás' songs, in which Rádhá is represented as complaining about Krish'n that while he himself is indulging in amorous intercourse with Kubrí and the Gopís, he exhorts her to devote herself to the practice of asceticism: ap ne jáï prem ras chákhe ham ko likhi likhi jog paṭháwe, i. e., 'while he himself is gone (to Gokul) to énjoy the sweets of love, he writes to me to recommend asceticism.'—Ep.]

1884.7

NOTE. बनिजरवा is long form of बनिजार, 'a merchant'. I would prefer to consider देख in the fifth line, as the 2nd singular imperative. बखरवा is long form of बखार, which literally means 'a granary.' G. A. G.

Translation.

From the eastern land came a merchant, O Rámá.

He took up his lodgings in Sundar's yard, O Hari.

The merchant has filled up the entire yard, O Rámá.

How shall I sweep the dust of the yard with my broom, O Hari?

I will push away the trappings of the oxen and cast away the sacks, O Rámá.

And I shall sweep the yard bending myself down, O Hari.

While sweeping the yard the skirts of my cloth flew away, O Rámá. And my wicked brother-in-law began to gaze on my breast, O Hari. I would get such a brother-in-law killed, O Rámá.

If my "knife-thrusting" were at home, O Hari.

"Knife-thrusting" here refers to her husband, because he is her natural protector and as such could deal vengeance.*

The Kajarís are sung during the rainy season. They were formerly indigenous to Mirzápur but are now spreading far and wide over the land. The airs of these songs are rather melancholy, though they are tuned to express different feelings and sentiments.

[The name of the song is probably derived from the darkness of the clouds at this season, which are considered to resemble $k \dot{a} j a r$ or lamp-black collyrium. The well-known author of the treatise called Hindí Bhákhá,-Bábú Hariśchandra-gives a different account. He says that there was in Central India a famous Rájpút prince named Dádú Ráy, in whose time no Musalmán dared touch the Ganges. On a famine occurring in his dominions, he brought rain by the ardour of his devotions. This made him so popular that when he died and his Queen Nág'matí became satí with his corpse, the women of the country invented a new melody which was named Kajali to express their The author concludes "there are two reasons for the name sorrow. Kajali; -- one, that the king owned a forest called Kajali ban, and the other, that the third of the month on which this song is most sung is called in the Puráns, the Kajjalí tíj. G. A. G.]

॥ ८ ॥ जँतसार गीत । १ बारह बरिसवा को मैना रे तिरियवा रे तेरहे बरिसवा गोबिन्दा खासिक रे ना

Rání. Thou art going to wander about, O my husband, as a Jogi (hermit). I shall accompany thee as a Jogini.

* [Na bane rah'ná, lit. 'dwelling is not made,' idiomatic for 'it is not possible to dwell.'-ED.]

Rájá. If a woman go with me, it will be impossible for me to live in the dreary desolate (wilderness); for we shall have to walk on and on, day and night, (and there will be) a double amount of trouble. When we come across a town and take rest, burning incense around us, (who knows,) the king of that town might come to (visit) the Jogí; he will see thy beautiful ruddy face and will entertain evil thoughts. He will kill me and make thee his principal queen. So both will come to grief—earthly joys and heavenly blessings. Worship thou the Protector of the poor (i. e., God), so that He may vouchsafe to me salvation.* Call me thy son, and give me alms, so that my devotions may insure to me immortality (lit. be immortal). Oh queen Syámdeo, why dost thou not listen to me ?

Thereupon the queen Syámdeo replied : Listen to me, O king ; if thou wilt be a hermit and wander about, play with me at dice.

Rájá. Why does the Rání want me to play at dice, and what am I to take in my hand as a stake?

Rání. If I lose I shall go along with thee, and if I gain I shall not let thee go.

Rájá. O queen, pray do not lay such a wager that secures both ends for thyself. (Let it be thus :) If Syámdeo win, I shall stay at home for ten days more, but if Bhar'tharí win, he will not take thee along with him.

Now the prince ordered the dice to be brought, and began to play.

The queen held the dice in her hands and said, "O dice, hear my entreaties; give me the reward of my (good) actions and let there be a cast of 16 and 7."

This little song describes in a few words the legend of Bhar'tharí, king of Nain'ghar, a place said to have been situate somewhere near Mirzapur.[†] The king suddenly became of an ascetic turn of mind, and was on the point of going to the woods, when the queen interposed with a view to dissuade him. But all these importunities were of no avail. The Rájá did leave his home for the woods, where he became a disciple of Gorakh'náth Bábá. This accounts for the songs relating to the life of Rájá Bhar'tharí being so widely sung by the mendicants belonging to the order of Gorakh'náth Bábá. They sing these songs with a very pathetic and rueful countenance in accompaniment with the harp (sárang).

* [Lit., 'so that he may ferry me across (the sea of life) in a boat.'-ED.]

† [This legend evidently refers to the famous Bhartrihari, said to be a brother of Vikramáditya of Ujjain, who became an ascetic.—ED.]

The boatman took hold of the feet of Rám (who was standing) before him,—he had seen him coming from afar,—(and said) "the blessed Lord has given me good luck to-day; undismayed in my heart I have made a great vow that I will not let Thee get on my boat without washing Thy feet." Gudur (the author) exclaims, "Oh twice blessed is the luck of the Nishád on the banks of the Sur'sari who has spent his whole life in killing the fish. Oh Lord ! thou art great, save me as thou hast saved the outcast fisherman."

The following history is connected with this song :--

Ahalyá was the wife of the venerable sage Gautam. Attracted by her beauty, Ind'r the god of the heavens and the disciple of Gautam, impersonated the form of his preceptor and ravished her in his absence. It was at last discovered and Gautam in his rage cursed both, and doomed Ahalyá to turn into a stone, till she was restored to life by the touch of the sacred feet of Rám. The redemption of Ahalyá is thus narrated in the Rámáyan: Rám and Lakshman were going to Janak in the company of the sage Viśwámit'r, and in the way, advised by the sage, Rám placed his feet on the stone, and Ahalyá was immediately restored to life. This news spread all over the vicinity, and hence when Rám wanted to cross the river Sur'sari, the fisherman was afraid lest his boat should turn into a human being, and he be thus deprived of his livelihood.

Who will listen to me but Thou, O God. If Thou wilt, Thou canst easily take across (the sea of life) My leaky boat without tackle.

Thou didst save the life of the elephant* who was seized by the crocodile.*

Thou hastenedst (to do so), oh Lord, nor didst make any delay. Thou didst multiply the clothes of the chaste Draupadí,*

* There is a mythological legend connected with the elephant and the crocodile. They were said to be brothers in a former life in the heavens. Both of them were heroes, and when they fell out with each other, they were cursed to assume their present form. It is said that one day when the elephant went to bathe in the river, the crocodile, not forgetting the former feud, seized the elephant by the leg in the river. When the elephant found that all efforts to extricate himself from the grasp of the crocodile were vain, he implored the mercy of Náráyan and he forthwith saved him.

† Draupadí was the joint wife of the five Pándavs, the heroes of the famous The Kurus, the cousins of the Pándavs, bore enmity with epic, the Mahábhárat. the latter on account of their both aspiring to the throne of Hastinapur, now called Delhi, which legally descended to the Pándavs. Sakuni, the maternal uncle of the Kurus, was a very successful player at dice, and confiding in his success Durjodhan, the head of the Kurus, invited Judhishthir, the head of the Pándavas to a play at dice, an offer which the latter could never refuse. Sakuni, on behalf of Durjodhan began to play with Judhishthir, and the latter lost all the games till he had lost his whole kingdom and even the freedom of his own person and his brothers. At last he was compelled to lay his wife Draupadí as a stake for the next game, and he lost her also. Duhśásan, the wicked brother of Durjodhan, dragged Draupadí into the assembly and put her to disgrace. At last Durjodhan ordered Duhśásan to strip her of her clothes. This was actually attempted, when she cried aloud imploring the help of her god, by whose grace she was supplied with fresh clothes as soon as the one on her person was snatched away, till a large heap of clothes was gathered in the assembly. The Kurus, finding their successive attempts to disgrace her baffled, left her alone. This event is said to have been one of the causes of the great war of the Mahábhárat.

(No sooner) thou heard'st the cry of the woman's distress.
Súr'dás (exclaims), "O Lord, thou hast saved many a sinner,
Why then dost thou delay in saving me (lit. how much delay is there in my time or case ?" G. A. G.)

Do not, O Lord, take my sins into consideration; For thou art called the impartial.

Thou canst save at thy will.

And is full of dirty water; but when they join, they become of one colour,

And the name of Sur'sar (Ganges) they bear.

Whereas another piece is used as a weapon of destruction;

But the philosopher's stone (Paras) makes no distinction between the two,

It turns both into pure gold.

PART I.

THE MEAN MOTIONS OF THE PLANETS ACCORDING TO THE SU'RYA AND ROMAKA SIDDHA'NTAS.

We are at present fairly well-acquainted with the general character of Hindú Astronomy and-among European scholars at least-there prevails no longer any doubt that the system exhibited in works like the Súrva Siddhánta, the Laghu-Aryabhatíya, etc. is an adaptation of Greek science. The time to which books like the Súrya Siddhánta must be ascribed from internal data, the date of Aryabhata,---if not the oldest, at least one of the oldest of the scientific Hindú Astronomers-which we know from his own statement, the fundamental similarity of the methods employed by the Greeks on the one and the Hindús on the other side, the fact of terms of unquestionably Greek origin being met with in Indian astronomical works, and lastly the testimony which the Hindú writers themselves bear to the proficiency of the Yavanas in the Jyotisha S'ástra more than suffice to convince impartial judges that the enormous progress which a book of the class of the Súrya Siddhánta marks on works of the nature of the Jyotisha Vedánga was not effected without help coming from the West.

But although the general fact of transmission is acknowledged the details of the process still stand in need of much elucidation, and we shall not be able to claim a full understanding of the position of the
